Battle in Cabinet likely as Lawson plans more cuts

By Philip Webster, Political reporter

A serious confrontation in Cabinet later this month between Mr Nigel Lawson, the which they feel Mr Lawson "Chancellor of the Exchequer, bounced" them into agreeing to and ministers in charge of last week's package by informspending departments appear ing them of his plans at very inevitable after the disclosure short notice. Their backbench that a downward revision of the colleagues believe that they will published public expenditure target for 1984-85 is in prospect. The Cabinet is likely to be told that cuts to take public expenditure below the levels planned for next year are mainly the yield from value-essential if its strategy of lower added tax (VAT), because taxes and lower interest rates is inflation is lower than was to be maintained.

Mr Lawson last week introduced an emergency £1,000m package of spending and unspecified state asset sales in an attempt to put this year's expenditure plans back on course. The speed at which he conducted the operation has angered some of his collegues.

The opening bids from the spending departments for 1984-85 are expected to be some £5,000m over the £126,400m envisaged in the February White Paper on public expenditure. However, it has now emerged that Mr Lawson may be seeking a reduction in that February projection.

Strong opposition is certain when the Cabinet has its first meeting on the annual review of advance public spending plans, known as PESC, before the summer recess, probably on Thursday, July 21, when the global totals for the next three

One of the reasons behind the hints of a cut in the 1984-85 planned total, are forecasts of reductions in tax revenues, expected when those plans were formulated. It was said in Whitehall yesterday that that factor could be offset to some extent if the economy grows at a rate faster than forecast.

The Treasury does not deny that difficult decisions will have to be taken. Conservative "wets" are delighted that Mr Michael Heseltine, the Secretary of State for Defence, and possibly Mr Norman Fowler, the Secretary of State for Social Services, whose departments were hit by last week's package, appear likely to line up against the Treasury with Mr Peter Walker and Mr James Prior, who have opposed largescale spending cuts in the past.

Mr Heseltine, in particular, was said by MPs to be angry at not being told about Mr Lawson's plans before he published his defence White Paper. After the Cabinet has agreed broad approach to spending next year, the detailed argument will begin with a series of "bilateral" meetings during the summer and autumn between the individual spending minis-ters and Mr Peter Rees, the Chief Secretary to the Treasury.

Even before it became apparent that Mr Lawson might want to revise the overall total, the talks had promised to be tough. Quite apart from the battle over the 1984-85 spending target, MPs are still expecting "readjustments"

Although Mr Lawson is said to regard last week's corrective measures as "adequate", the Treasury figures apparently show public borrowing at some £3,000m above the Budget figure of £8,200m.

There are gorowing signs of anxiety among the Conserva-tive "wets" at the prospect of further cuts. Although there was no coordination of effort. a large number of Tory MPs spoke during the Queen's Speech debate about the need for the Government to make the reduction of unemployment a higher priority even than the reduction of inflation.

£1m tennis spending defended

Lawn Tennis Association and

All England Club officials vesterday defended the decision to spend £1m on improvements at the Queen's Club in west London, and said the move would not affect loans to other clubs. Although Queen's Club is owned by the Lawn Tennis Association it is run as a private club, and a weekend press report suggested that the largest investment in British tennis outside Wimbledon was being lavished on a privileged few. Apparently the money for the improvements at Queen's does oot come from the everyday resources of the associations but from a debenture share issue. One of the requirements of raising such money is that it must b spent on capital improvements.

The money to be spent is, therefore, different from that spent on other clubs and will not affect loans to other clubs at all, although the fact remains that loans elsewhere totalled a much smaller sum last year. Work will begin in October on renewing the existing facilities at the Queen's Club and continue, when planning permission has been obtained, with four new indoor courts.

That should help to maintain the reputation of Wimbledon as the world's premier event by improving the practice facilities, and should also go a little way to remedying the lack of indoor courts that has held British tennis back in the past 20 years. Both Sir Brian Burnett, chairman of the All England Club and Mr James Cochrane, president of the Lawn Tennis Association, were reported to be angry yesterday at what they regarded as misleading reports.

Covered courts at Queens will be available not only for Wimbledon practice but for the Stella Artois championships, and it could be argued that such improvements are overdue. Sir Brian also denied a report that Wimbledon tennis would be played under lights for the first time in its 106-year history. At this stage Wimbledon is apparently only experimenting with the possibility and might decide it was too expensive.

Mr Charlie Hewitt, a former Detective Chief Superintendent, who spent more than a year on the Dr Adams case, is convinced he was a mass murderer. He suspects he may even have killed a vital witness whose evidence could have sent him to the gallows.

In a book to be published next month Mr Hewitt says: "He was as guilty as hell but he had the luck of the Devil. He was without doubt a mass murderer who deserved to hang 20 times over. Public's help sought to tackle loan shark menace

By Derek Harris, Commercial Editor

Loan sharks who trap mostly the disadvantaged into a whirl-pool of debt and then resort to aggressive methods to ensure repayment got a warning yester-day from Sir Gordon Borrie, Director General of Fair Trad-

Sir Gordon, who wants to curb the loan sharks, said local authority trading standards departments and his Office of Fair Trading needed "the cooperation and sometimes the courage" of the public in enforcing legislation which could stop illegal moneylenders. At the same time the National Association of Citizens' Advice Bureaux said the activities of moneylenders charging extortionate rates of interest were growing. It was particularly affecting inner-city areas where the unemployed and single-parent families resorted to moneylenders as the only means of raising loans. The loan shark menace has been increasing for 18 months, the association said. Of five million inquiries last year to bureaus around the country, a 12 per cent increase on the debt questions. The sharks put pressure on debtors in several ways, the association reported. Women who had raised loans without their husbands' knowledge were threatened with disclosure to the husband. Vans marked

Sir Gordon described a favourite gambit by the loan sharks: illegally taking supplementary benefit or family allowance books as security against loans.

At Netherley, Liverpool, where there is a high unemployment rate and a large single-parent population, Miss Char-lotte Anderson, the local advice bureau organizer, said she knew of cases where family allowance books had been impounded for as long as 11 years as debtors were trapped into a cycle of

Inner-city action 'inadequate'

By Baron Phillips Property Correspondent

Government attempts to rejuvenate Britain's decaying inner-city areas has achieved only minor successes, Shelter, the National Campaign for the Homeless, claims today.

Schemes, such as homesteading, shared ownership and building for sale, have had limited impact in inner urban treas, Shelter says. Since the Government launched urban initiatives in 1980 aimed at regenerating home ownership in inner-city areas, sales have totalled only 19,000 compared with 275,000 homes sold under the right-to-buy campaign and 315,000 private sector starts during the same period.

step down for health reasons. It has been known for at least two years that Mr Frigyes Puja, aged 62, Foreign Minister since 1973, had asked to be relieved of his post for personal reasons. But the choice last week of Mr Peter Varkonyi, aged 52, as his successor came as a surprise to political observers here.

Only last year Mr Varkonyi was appointed secretary for international affairs on the party Central Committee, and reshuffles in the upper reaches of the party usually do not happen so quickely in eastern block countries.

Observers also note that the post Mr Varkonyi left is considered to rank higher than his new appointment. They say the move appears to be a political compromise to bolster the position of Mr Janos Kadar, the party leader, of Kovaes.

Futhermore, Mr Markonyi's replacement as secretary for international affairs on the Central Committee is Mr Matyas Szuros, aged 50, former head of the international sec-

Mr Szuros, described as a man cast in the Soviet mould, worked under Mr Varkonyi, and observers believe it unlikely that he will now be in a positioon of greater power over his former superior.

The reshuffle is unlikely to bring any change in Hungarian foreign policy.

Other changes announced were the appointment of Mr Mihaly Kornidasz, head of the Committee's department of science, education and culture to head of Hungarian television, and General Sandor Racz as deputy Defence Minister after the retirement of General Pal

How can ready-prepared investment schemes really be fresh?

An investor may seem efficient if he presents you with a scheme as soon as you walk through the door.

But usually such swiftness means you're getting a standard package off the shelf.

That wouldn't matter if an investment scheme was no more crucial than a chicken leg or a pound of mince.

However, your company's future could depend on that finance and in particular on the way it's structured.

Ideally it should fit your needs precisely.

And as nobody else has exactly your cash requirements, tax liability or the same equity position, that means an investment scheme custom made.

At Investors in Industry, we've more than 37 years' experience tailoring long-term and permanent capital for businesses of every size.

Over £2 billion so far.

It's helped to establish companies and assisted with growth.

In each case our first job has been to take a close look at the company and the people who run it.

Not to interfere, but in order to see clearly how best we can help.

Often the most appropriate solution has come from an innovative approach.

For instance, in one case we found a way to make a fixed rate loan at below the market interest rate.

It involved taking share warrants in our client's North American parent.

Another innovation has been our 'drop-lock' loans.

They enable us to offer competitive, variable interest rates which can be 'locked', or converted, to a fixed rate within an agreed period.

We also pioneered management buy-outs.

Because we understood the special position of the managers involved, we were able to create a form of finance that made buy-outs possible.

At the heart of our ability to innovate is an unrivalled combination of financial, commercial and industrial skills.

It's made us one of the most important sources of investment capital in this country.

Perhaps some of that finance could be helping your company.

But don't ask us how we'd package it.

We'd need to sit down and get to know each other before answering that one.

It is 19 years since Omar Sharif galloped across the world's screens in Lawrence of Arabia. Next month, he returns to the stage after driving a generation of women frantic and men to drink. Old Brown Eyes is back

By Sally Brompton

playing the kind of film roles that have driven women frantic and men to drink, Omar Sharif is returning to his first love: the stage. And for his reappearance on the boards, the Egyptian actor has picked the Chichester Festival Theatre, where next month he opens in Terence Rattigan's The Sleeping Prince, playing Prince Regent of Carpathia, the character immortalized by Laurence Olivier in the film The Prince and the Showgirl

After a movie eareer more memorable for his much-acclaimed liquid brown eyes than for his acting ability, it would seem an unnecessary risk for a performer who has been a millionaire several times over and can still command £500,000 or so for three weeks' filming. Omar Sharif is well aware of the dangers but explains: "I think I started out with an enormous amount of talent. Now I'm going to in evidence. So is the courtesy. his outlook.

He has brought his housekeeper over from Paris to look after him in the elegant town house that is costing him more in rent than the few hundred pounds a week he is earning at the theatre. His housekeeper is a vital part of his bachelor life. After 17 years together, he says of her. "She is everything the perfect wife should be, without the problems".

At 51, Sharif is still as sleek as one of his own thoroughbred racehorses, and the much-chronicled charm is greatly in evidence. So is the courtesy. His carefully casual navy slacks and gleaming white open-necked shirt.

He approached middle age with trepidation. "Fifty is a frightening sum of years; the beginning of old age. Fifty is a turning point. I think it's kind of sad", he said, and spent his fiftieth birthday sitting alone in his Paris flat. He hates celebrations at the best of "I don't like n Christmas and the New Year, All those celebrations are family things".

His marriage, to Faten Hamama, the Middle East's most famous actress. lasted 10 years before falling apart when he became a Hollywood star. Their only son is grown up and lives in Canada. Sharif insists that the marriage was very happy and that it was just their careers that came between them. "Just think of it . . . I was frustration and loneliness involved in making an honest bob or two.

"If you lived quite alone in hotel rooms, moving from one country to pretty girls, and I never once cheated on my wife. Of all my achievements in life, I think that is what I'm most proud of."

Sharif in middle age. 'I really am a mother's boy. And very lazy'

Since the parting, speculation about his love life has dominated tabloid newspapers the world over. It has, says Sharif, been greatly exaggerated. "Contrary to what people think, I haven't had a lot of different girlfriends. I've gone out now and then with a girl because you have to. You can't live totally alone. I've had very short relationships, sexual relationships, but no more than anyone else. Many fewer, in fact. All my friends have more girls than I've ever had"...

He has nothing against remarrying - "although it's a bit late in the day" but after 20 years he has grown accustomed to living alone. "I'm very independent now; I'm not sure I'd be able to live with someone else again".

The only son of a wealthy timber merchant, he was brought up in Cairo, where he had an "extraordinarily nice" childhood. He attended Victoria College, the finest school in the Middle East, along with such diverse embryonic celebrities as King Husain and Adnan Khashoggi. ("If they wanted to", he says, "the people who went to my school could run the world"). He recollects being good at everything a gifted scholar, captain of football and cricket, president of the debating and dramatic societies and head boy.

It was acting, however, that fired his ambition, spurred on by a doting mother who was determined that her son would become a star. Even today he is closer to his mother than to any

"I really am a mother's boy. I adore her and she adores me. She's not just proud of me - she faints when she sees me. She gets hysterical. If she were here now she'd want me to sit on her knee." A widow now, she lives in Spain but mother and son talk to each other on

It is what he describes as play that accounts for the main part of Omar Sharif's life. His passions are playing bridge, racing his stable of horses and dining out. The reason he spent so much time learning bridge to inter-national standard, he insists, was to avoid working. "I'm very lazy."

He has just returned from Cairo where, by popular demand, he made a television film in Arabic. "The people there obviously love me dearly and every time I went back they asked me to make a film especially for them. I chose a story of a higher standard than they're used to, to try to bring some culture into their homes."

After staying away from his homeland for many years, during the Nasser regime, he now goes back regularly.

Now he enjoys the indulgence of just sitting around and talking with his own countrymen. "I find it very difficult to make real friends in the West because I'm very sentimental and melodramatic in my relationships and western people are very cold fish. They don't like you to hug and kiss them."

Even women, apparently, get over-whelmed by his affection. "I'm very demonstrative with women, very emotional. I'm like a little dog, socialites. I'd love to meet a nice actually. But it's not enough. They need other things as well." He admires as an afterthought. If his performance at Chichester is successful he would like to play Othello. "It's a part I like and I think that for once a Moor should play the Moor." His only other ambition is to breed a Derby winner.

Watch your cruising speed

Last Wednesday, in the middle of the watching 2ft of floodwater swirl round my gunwale and it occurred to me yet again hat we British are always taken completely unawares by conditions like these, for all the world as if we had never done any underwater motoring before in our lives.

So today I am going to answer the most common questions asked about this pretty but absorbing passime. Cut this column out and keep it in your glove compartment. On second thoughts, cut it out and paste it to the roof above the driver's seat.

How do I know when I have hit flood water:

The first thing you will notice, especially a night, is a great pillar of water rising on either side of your car. Momentarily you will have childhood memories of those funfair big dippers which shot down a ramp and hit a tank of water at 30 mph. If the property water was childhood. you cannot remember your childhood, you will probably have memories of going in a channel ferry and hitting a very hig wave. If by now the car has come to a standstill, you will get out to have a look. A moment later you will be sorry you did so.

What should I do if the car refuses to move through the water?

Rather than sit in your seat and wait to be drowned, it is best to manoeuvre yourself through the window and on to the roof. This can be tricky: and it's best to practise at home before you set out. Even when on the roof you are, don't forget, still legally in charge of the car and must wear a seat belt. The average modern belt is long enough to reach to the roof.

What if I'm parked illegally?

Although this has never been tested in a court of law, parking regulations in Britain are thought to apply only to motoring on land. There are no regulations as far as I know against parking in a navigable river. Yellow lines are probably invalid below water, as well as being impossible to see. But remember that the laws of the sea will apply to your car, which is now theoretically an ocean-going vessel.

Will I have to hoist a flag or something?

No, no. Navigation lights will be quite enough - red on the passenger side, green on the driver's side and a white light on top of the wireless arial. Cars give way to lorries, and company cars should, as a matter of courtesy give way to private cars. Salvage laws also come into operation, and if you find an abandoned car it is theoretically, while in water, all yours for

How can I go about getting help?

The first people to come by will almost certainly be a TV outside broadcast van. getting pictures for the local news. Refuse all offers of help from them. All they want to do is tow you into deeper water for a better picture. And before they start filming, haggle about money with them. This is the only language they understand. Try asking them for a form which will allow you to claim against the car as overnight accommodation. If anyone else comes past, just ask them to pull you to dry or at least exposed ground. You may have to go through certain simple Customs' formalities, but as long as you started your journney in Britain and are not carrying drugs you should be all right.

Can the driver of an underwater car have the power, like ships' captains, to marry passengers on board?

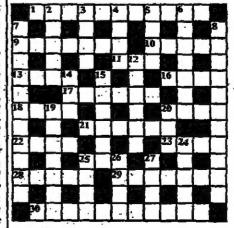

Only if you are a vicar. It is a total myth. about ships' captains. But a brief shipboard romance can do no harm and will while away the time until the waters recede.

Is there nothing else I can do to get help? Yes. Send forth a dove on the face of the that psychologists disagree far more than other scientists about the nature of one at that. So, read these findings with care.

The fear that drink will not the brain has now been partially com-firmed for the too fortified over-forties at least. Mark Goldman and colleagues at Wayne State University kept 31 alcoholics off the bottle for three months.

After two to three weeks without a drink, young alcoholics recovered completely. They were as good as their sober controls at fitting pegs into holes at speed, at matching patterns and bearing track of moving objects. and keeping track of moving objects. But those who were older than 40 did not recover even after three dry months. The most surprising finding, Goldman claims, is that this failure to recover has nothing to do with how long subjects had had a drink problem. Some men over 40 had been alcoholics for only four years, others for 35 years. Neither group managed to get their visual and spatial performance back to normal. The moral seems to be drink till you're 40 and then join a temperance club.

Pavlov's dogs are among the most famous beasts in psychology. One can only wonder what Pavlov would have made of Daniel Tortora of RemBeh-Con Inc (which must stand, I suppose, O Brave New World, for Remedial Behaviour Conditioning Inc). Tortora has spent years in "the elimination of avoidance-motivated aggression in dogs". He has devised a training programme in which dogs learn to play and are given a variety of play and are given a variety of challenges so that they conquer fear and their desire to snari, snap and bite. Tortora thinks humans can also be trained to be "prosocial" with a "safety training programme" in which

Immigrant groups are complaining that far too many blacks in Britain end up in psychiatric hospitals. The values of psy-chiatrists are white; the criteria by which patients are judged same or insame are those of a white society. A rumbustious Rastafarian may convince a psychiatrist all too easily that he needs a spell in the bin. What is playful in culture may appear pathological in ours. In Los Angeles, a survey of 1,003 families has tried to discover whether blacks, "Anglos" or Hispanics ex-pressed depression in different ways. Crudely put, were the blues of "whites" the same blues as the blues of blacks? Members of the 1,003 families were interviewed for an hour and a quarter. Questions covered everything from how often they had thought of suicide to how many pleasant thoughts they had daily. The results showed that there seemed to be little difference between the groups' experiences of depression. The Hispanics, however, reported fewer feelings of well-being transcendental medication was one of the great fads of the Swinging Sixties. Its adepts argued that they had nothing to fear from scientific investigation. One can measure the physiological miracles that meditation produced a lower hans with less produced - lower heart rate, less stressful arousal and so on. Studies have certainly established that when meditating a person's heart rate and blood pressure tend to go down, but according to David Holmes and colleagues at Kansas University, no one has really done a methodological comparison of those who meditate regularly and those who, guru-less, just

The Kansas psychologists found an meditators tended to have a higher heart rate and diastolic blood pressure before they started meditating than the nonmeditators did before they began to take a rest. Experienced meditators certainly reduced, during meditation, their heart rate, blood pressure, breathing rate and skin resistance (a traditional measure of stress) - but to no greater extent than stress) - but to no greater extent than did those who just rested. A crucial difference, however, was that those who meditated said they felt much more physiologically relaxed than those who just rested. The study certainly suggests that one should be cautious of making grand claims about the physiological effects of meditation.

One of the most thriving fields in psy-chology is that of child development. Very young infants are have unlikely, pre-cocious abilities which run counter to old theories. A team at Vanderbilt University led by R. sideways look at the British way of life there is an animal in British society more beloved of man than the horse, it is keeping very quiet. Not even the dog, allegedly my best friend, can inspire the pitch of affection commanded by the equine species. I must confess at the outset that the horse excites in me little more than terror and grudging envy: terror, because of his or her proven ability to fling me into the air like a hay bale, and envy because of his or her capacity to circle Aintree at the speed of a family saloon and be insured for sums of up to £7 million. I feel that with either of these attributes I would enhance incalculably the esteem in which I am held by society in general and my wife in particular.

But as one without such high performance in the areas of speed and stamina, it is my lot to admire those creatures who possess it, and to note, qualities have rendered it so humanoid. I suppose it speaks well for mankind's sense of gratitude that we give the honour of near-equality to animals that have served us so tirelessly in matters military, agrarian and hedonistic. Take this for example, a small zoo news item in The Times last year recording the passing of Sinbad, the horse used by President Reagan when he hosted the Western television series Death Valley Days. Here is the embryo of a respect usually evinced by human obituarists: "Sinbad was retired from show business several years ago and spent his time munching alfalfa and entertaining children". I would attemt a joke about how wrong it is for anyone, horses included, to munch entertaining children, were I not afraid that Sinbad's surviving relatives would sue.

Or take the brief but spirited correspondence on our letters page last December about the matter of honours for horses, after the suggestion that deserving cases be rewarded with medals had been derided in the Commons. One correspondent reminded us that Vonolel, a 14.2 hand grey Arabian, ridden by Lord Roberts in the 313-mile expedition for the relief of Kandahar, recieved by special permission of Queen Victoria the Afghan Medal with four clasps and the Kabul Kandahar mostly with astonishment, the way in which its Star. In 1897 at the ripe old age of 26, wearing his honours, he carried Roberts in the Diamond Jubilee procession.

> These days, of course, the horse's military role is almost entirely ceremonial, and its industrial function has declined dramatically; 35 years ago there were no fewer than 47,000 pit ponies in this country hauling coal for long distances thousands feet below the surface. Now there are barely 100, retained for drawing supplies through areas of the mines which are either impossible or uneconomic to modernize.

> No such dwindling in the ranks of what might be termed the leisure horse which, in its several manifestations has almost as many sorts and conditions as the human. None is more popular than the child's pony, so often the homely precursor of boys in the affections of a faddist daughter. They (the ponies, not the boys) can still be had for as little as £300 with a little judicious research, but the minefield is well charted: the pony, like the boy of later years perhaps, is outgrown and a replacement sought, with all the indant heartaches.

In almost every category, it seems, the impulse towards horse ownership is linked inextricably to the competitive spirit, the child's pony class is no exception, with the ever present lure of the gymkhana and Pony Club. Nor is that of the polo pony, almost always a four-figure investment, and exclusively the province of the AB socio-economic group. Few owner/players would admit to the charge of running upper-class motor bikes, but it is apt enough. Then we have the breeders, whose number includes the Duchess of Devonshire with her Shetlands at Chatsworth and the Queen herself, with her fat black fell ponies at Balmoral. Neither of these ladies, I agree, need feel the need to be competitive, as they are already winners on most conventional criteria, yet can there ever be a total absence of edgy comparison where offspring are concerned? I doubt it.

Finally we come to the Private Drivers and the Trotters, vehicle people, respectively the Duke of Edinburghs and Old Steptoes of the equestrian spectrum, and the Commercial Drivers, of which the Whitbread dray men are the most famous example. For my part, I would be happy with the little piebald mare from the stables on the common, whose back is so low that my feet would scrape the ground reassuringly. And if she is not available, then I shall stick to Shanks's Pony.

They know more about hunting than we do. We take them on holiday at the end of the season to Exmoor and get fit together.

I've only got so many hunting days left and I don't intend to miss any of them.

"In the early days everyone thought I was mad to work the farm entirely with horses. Now I think their attitude has changed a bit. Today I'm looking out on a cloudless sky, and I find it difficult to remember the dreadful wet spring. A lot of farmers didn't get their crops planted. We did. I've always believed we would need to work with horses again - it won't happen overnight, but happen, as alternative resources ru dry or out or are just unsuitable. I farm with Shires, Clydesdales, Percherons and Ardennes. We are about two thirds arable and at some time we do almost all the work with horses - manuring, tilling, plough-ing, harrowing, cultivating, drilling, hay-making, harvesting. I'm not against the new technology altogether - we use a fair amount - but I believe in trying to get the best from the old ways and the new. I think the

I bought my first filly foal in 1965. Until I bought Mrs Moss was getting depressed: it was not a question of how many won, but of how many were not last. I bought her in 1975 in a sale; I saw this pretty little mare standing at £1,800 - it seemed a ridiculous price so I put my hand up. She hadn't reached her reserve and I thought "my husband's going to murder me!" She was in foal, and that was sold for £1,600 the following year which wasn't so bad . . . Then in '78 she had a dreadful time with her foal. I begged my husband to let me keep the foal... We called her Pushy and took her to Henry Cecilo. More obsessive converts of the good life are less peaceably inclined. In cinemas they thump somebody painfully on the shoulder while informing him that he has lit up in a no-smoking area. In restaurants they demand to know the whereabouts of stock cubes and other hidden poisons. Their latest plan is to force the Department of Health to publish a shock report on the effects of the nation's sluggish, salty and sugary diet. How French fries score over cranky Yanks one will deny that a soyaburger is better for you than a bag of chips, but before getting too faddy about food it's as well to reflect on some findings by Dr Ray Roseman, cardiologist and senior research physician at Stanford Research Institute. Dr Roseman believes that health is "a psychosocial rather than a biological state" and to prove it he did some comparative research on groups of arisians and Americans. The French sat slumped for hours over long heavy meals, washed down with wine cemented with Gauloises. The Americans lived more the sort of life advocated by Jane Fonda, the kind that calls for a scattering of wheatgerm and leotards. Not surprisingly, the Parisians had higher blood pressure. They also had less than a third of the heartattack rate of the Americans, which Dr Roseman attributed to the fact hat their lives were rich in friends and fun as well as fats and fags. Sometimes a couple of gins and few laughs will do more to put the roses back in your cheeks than a bowl of grated carrots and a yoga class.

The priggish and militant disapproval towards the things that most people like - an ice-cold beer in a smoky pub, a bar of chocolate on a cushion-filled sofa - is likely to make converts. Better to concentrate on describing the effects of too frequent self-indulgence: the searing pain of a heart attack, the ghastly sweaty tiredness from carrying too much weight around.

Gova, going, gone? Spain's prosecutor-general has taken up the case of a missing portrait by Goya which Franco once wanted to present to Hitler. The portrait of the Marquesa of Santa Cruz attracted the Caudillo because it showed her wearing a swastika pendant. The portrait was bought in London in the early 1940s at a nod from Franco to a Spanish industrialist who was then to hand the painting over. But Franco lost interest as the Third Reich faltered. The industrialist's heirs now deny suspicions that the portrait has left Spain in defiance of the country's art export laws.

A vote for the moral majority

One of the most interesting features of the capital punishment debate has been the remarkable activity of the liberal-progressive establishment in seeking to create a climate of opinion hostile to measures which it regards as unacceptable.

We have seen in the opinion and news columns of the heavier press a virtual flood of propaganda designed to show that the case for capital punishment is bogus and unfounded and that, in any event, the exercise has no prospect of being implemented

Last week the formidable and respected Economist abandoned its usual conservative cover for a dramatic "The case against hanging". One of the main points of the three-page article was that capital punishment would result in massive confusion and delays of years because of the appeals which convicted murderers could make to the European Court. It went on: "Britain's membership of a European Convention which almost certainly rules out execution means that appeals from British courts would be further subject to delay, and the penalty would be even more uncertainly applied".

Far from providing scope for further appeals, Article 2 of the European Convention states specifically that: No one shall be deprived of his life intentionally save in the execution of a sentence of a court following his conviction of a crime for which this penalty is provided by law".

In short, while the European Court has immense powers to hear appeals about a vast range of penalties, lawful capital punishment is specifically excluded. And while it is true that a number of European states joined to add a protocol to the declaration on the abolition of the death penalty, the British Government recently made it clear that it would not be bound by this in any way.

MPs have been subjected to a series of statements and opinions from pressure groups and institutions. Recently I had a message from the general secretary of the British Council of Churches advising me that its executive committee and "Christian leaders" had agreed that there was "substantial doubt that capital punishment had any significant deterrent effect".

Home Office figures show that in the 20 years from 1945 to 1964, when capital punishment was in force, and despite a large increase in general crime, there was no increase in the number of unlawful killings. In fact it could be argued that the total actually fell; there were 347 in 1946, and 296

Since abolition the figures have climbed steadily to an average of 590 a year in the last five years. But even if these figures are discounted, surely even the British Council of Churches cannot ignore the sharp increase in the use of guns by criminals since abolition. In the last 10 years, the number of offences involving ficearms has risen from about 1,700 a year to more than 8,000.

There have been repeated news stories that the Government and even the Prime Minister are "secretly" opposed to the reintroduction of capital punishment; that Conservative Whips have been speaking in dark corners to innocent backbenchers; and that even if the vote was in favour, no Bill would be presented for at least two years.

None of these reports has any foundation. I have heard not a breath of any Whip seeking to influence anyone on the issue. and the Prime Minister made it abundantly clear that a positive vote on Wednesday would be followed by a Bill in Government time this session.

The liberal-progressives have won most of the battles, at least until this week. The flood of permissive legislation which has gone through the Commons since the 1960s, and the failure to amend any of these measures, is a tribute to their success. But I believe that their luck is coming to an end and that Wednesday might see the beginning of the fight back by those disparagingly referred to, but accurately described, as the moral his mid-eighties, does not merely dominate Malawi. A stern Victorian paterfamilias who brooks no criticism and treats his ministers like wayward children, he bas become the semi-deified object of a personality cult which has few parallels anywhere else in the world.

Dr Banda is Life President of both the nation and the Malawi Congress Party (MCP), the only legal political organization. He also acts as Minister of Foreign Affairs, Defence, Justice and Agriculture. He appoints all ministers and senior party officials, and enforces an old-fashioned puritanism imbibed from the Scottish missionaries who gave him his first schooling and baptized him into the Church of Scotland, of which he is an ordained elder.

Drinking is strongly discouraged, and women are forbidden to wear mini-skirts and slacks. Men cannot grow their hair below mouth level. Films, newspapers, magazines and books are strictly censored. There is no television, though Dr Banda has a set and is rumoured to pick up BBC transmissions via his own earth satellite station.

periodic The President's excursions among his subjects follow a well-established routine. First, the wailing sirens and the motorcade, containing usually two ambulances and, mysteriously, a fire engine; then the adulatory reception by party officials and dancing by groups of mbumba, ample-bosomed ladies in brightly coloured shifts decorated with portraits of the President. Dr Banda himself, how-ever hot the weather, never varies his wardrobe of black homburg hat, dark three-piece western suit, walking stick and fly whisk.

It is hardly surprising that Malawians find difficulty in imagin-ing life without him. The prospect is no less intriguing for the country's neighbours, for under Dr Banda's rule, Malawi has been the odd-manout in southern Africa, Full diplomatic relations were established more than 10 years ago with apartheid-practising South Africa, secret of his impatience with the pretensions of the Organization of African Unity (OAU), whose "diplo-macy of bluff and bluster" he delighted in puncturing in the days when he still bothered to attend its

At home, he spurned the fashionable post-colonial nostrums of free education and health services for the masses, and rapid Africanization of the civil service, emphasizing instead rural development and government support for the peasant smallholder. The result is that while few Malawians have a secondary education, even fewer starve. The country, though very poor, grows enough maize free of the disfiguring shanty towns produced by the exodus of the rural destitute elsewhere in Africa.

Malawi's unique relationship with South Africa has undoubtedly brought material benefits. The South Africans largely financed the construction of the new capital of Lilongwe and the new rail spur linking it to the post of Nacala on the Mozambique coast; and more recently built a 180,000-ton grain silo north of the city, which can store an entire season's marketed maize crop. The price Dr Banda paid, particularly after the collapse white-minority regimes in Angola, Mozambique and Zim-babwe, was to be cold-shouldered and treated as an Uncle Tom by other African states less ready to acknowledge their economic links

In 1980, Dr Banda made a move to come in from the cold by joining the Southern African Development Coordination Conference (SADCC). The aim of this grouping of nine black states is to reduce their economic dependence on South Africa, in the first instance by improving port facilities in Mozambique, Tanzania and Angola and the road and rail links serving them. This is of obvious interest for Malawi and other landlocked members of SADCC.

Banda: in his eighties, but still no certain successor

Nacala nor Beira, further south, which are Malawi's natural outlets to the sea, can handle the heavy demands on them. Malawi's tobacco exports, its main foreign exchange earner, have to take an expensive and circuitous route via Zambia, where they are transferred to a pontoon ferry and taken across the Zambezi into Botswana, and thence to Zeerust and the South Africa rail link to Durban.

Malawi's imports are no less badly affected. Some 130,000 tons of fertilizer ordered by Malawi have been held up in Mozambique ports for the past 12 to 18 months, forcing Dr Banda to turn to South Africa for supplies. Similarly, nearly all Malawi's fuel imports come via South Africa, with the result that about half the price of petrol in Malawi is accounted for by transport

While Malawi's special position has to some extent now been accepted by its neighbours, Dr Banda's relations with most other SADOC leaders remain cool at best. He never concealed his dislike for Robert Mugabe. He is barely on nembers of SADCC. speaking terms with Presidents
At present, for example, neither Julius Nyerere (Tanzania) and Samora Machel (Mozambique), and there is a danger of territorial disputes with both their countries should oil ever be discovered in Lake Malawi in economically viable quantities.

Dr Banda enjoys a warmer personal rapport with President Kenneth Kaunda of Zambia. Both belong to the Chewa tribe, and both believe there is merit in at least maintaining a dialogue with South Africa. Dr Kaunda irritated other African leaders by meeting Pieter Botha, the South African Prime Minister, under a tree on the Botswana-South African border in Both Tanzania and Mozambique and more recently Zambia, have provided a haven for exiled Malawian opposition groups, none of which appears to have much following inside the country. The most substantial opposition figure is Dr Orton Chirwa, a former Justice Minister, now under sentence of death for treason, having been fured back to Malawi in late 1981.

No Gladstonian liberal himself, Dr Chirwa could be a contender for the succession if he survives (the President can commute the death sentence) and would probably like to pursue a more conventional African foreign policy, though whether he or any one else could now afford to sever diplomatic ties with South Africa is another matter.

It seems that earlier this year Dr Banda suggested devolving some powers on to the shoulders of John Tembo, the governor of the Reserve Bank, possibly by creating the office of Prime Minister or Vice President for him. An unpopular figure, Mr Tembo appears to draw his main strength from the fact that he is the uncle of Miss Cecilia Kadzamira, Dr Banda's official hostess and consort and a woman of considerable power

The move to advance him was opposed by several Cabinet ministers, including Dick Materie and Aaron Gadama, both popular figures who shortly afterwards died in what was officially described as a car accident. Independent sources, however, claim to have eye-witness evidence that they were shot, probably by low-level members of the police, though on whose

Bernard Levin: the way we live now

One more nail in the unions' coffin

The council workers at Merthyr Tydfil have been on strike. The dispute, now settled, did not concern me directly, as in the course of an average week I make little or no use of their services, but it did and does concern the citizens of that picturesque and legend-haunted spot, and most particularly a Mr Francis Pippins, whose wife recently died. The late Mrs Pippins had expressed a wish to be buried in a particular local cemetery, but the municipal gravediggers were among those on strike, the local undertaker was unwilling to cross the picket-lines after having received a threatening telephone call, and Mr Pippins, mindful of his wife's last request, would not agree (this was the reluctant undertaker's advice to the other bereaved people of the area) to have her cremated instead, and to have her ashes stored until the dispute was resolved.

The deadlock was broken by the family and friends of Mrs Pippins. who railied round and dug her grave themselves, defying the pickets at the cemetery gate and incidentally achieving a notable "first" for the do-it-vourself movement. But when the burial of Mrs Pippins, in the grave dug by her closest circle, was about to take place, it was discovered that the grave had been filled in and turfed over.

Leaders of the union concerned in the dispute denied that any of their members was responsible for this action, and I propose to ignore the denial, on the ground that, try as I may, I cannot summon up sufficient gullibility to believe it.

It is generally agreed that one of the most substantial contributions to the decline of support for the Labour Party at the last two general elections has been the behaviour of the trade union movement; recognition of the fact may be coloured by rejoicing or regret, but I doubt if Mr Eric Heffer himself, surely the most credulous figure since the investors in the South Sea Bubble, would maintain that it is not true. From the "winter of discontent" that felled Mr Callaghan to the buffooneries of Mr Scargill, and from the antics of "Red Robbo" to the more subtle but hardly less outrageous antics of Welsh Mosso, the unions have for years been sowing a crop that Mrs Thatcher has been effortlessly reaping; whatever the final form of the legislation that Mr Tebbit is to introduce in this Parliament, it will be second in popularity only to a proposal to abolish the income tax. with the additional advantage that it is actually going to happen.

Now if you can imagine any action better calculated to reinforce and extend that feeling than what happened at Merthyr Tydfil you must have a nonpareil imagination. Yet there is a paradox in the story, as in most union horror stories. The men who prevented a widower from burying his dead wife, and those who went so far as to fill in her grave when he tried to do so without their agreement, surely did not want to incur public odium for themselves, their organization and the unions in

What was it that, in leading them into behaviour that was not of men but of dogs, simultaneously blinded them to the effect that the action must inevitably have on the people of the area? Tim Jones, who wrote the original Times story of the incident assures me that the filling in of the grave lost the strikers virtually all the remaining public sympathy they had, but the assurance even of so meticulous a reporter as Mr Jones was quite unnecessary: anyone with a quarter of a brain could deduce that that would be the inevitable result. The question is: why could the strikers not deduce it?

The answer goes to the heart of the lamentable quality of Britain's trade unions, and constitutes a terrible indictment of the labour movement, of governments of all political stripes, and of our edu-cational system. Nobody has taught these people how to use power.

You may say that the union nower exerted on this occasion was limited; it added to the grief of a man already bowed by sorrow, but that is hardly comparable to the power wielded by an Ahasuerus or a Stalin. True, and fortunate, for in Stalin. True, and fortunate, for in the selfish, irresponsible or down-right wicked use of power, great oaks from little acorns grow. But slight though the power wielded by trade union officials may be, it is not altogether negligible, and in any case that is not my point; the important fact is that power may be used well or ill, positively or negatively, to further or to hamper the advance of

And nobody has ever told the British trade union movement that. (The one man who might have done - George Woodcock, the most thoughtful and substantial of all modern TUC general secretaries took quite consciously the disastrous decision not to attempt to lead the unions at all, and an opportunity was lost that may never recur.) I believe that training in the exercise of power is in essence training in moral quality, but it is not necessary to take so lofty a view; such training is also a means of teaching self preservation, and if the union movement is not interested in discovering the difference between right and wrong, it ought at least to equip itself to learn what will, and what will not, enhance its own material interests. Yet it does not.

The American unions, which are much weaker than ours, do not make this mistake; the German ones, which are stronger than ours, do not make it either, the Japanese, which are of a different order altogether, would find the British attitude too bizarre to understand. So much the worse, your average Merthyr Tydfil gravedigger would reply, for a pack of bloody foreigners - a reply which might at first seem conclusive, until you notice that the workers in all three of those countries are very considerably better off than they are here, and if you are capable of believing that there is no direct connexion between the two conditions you must be Mr Heffer himself.

The 500 strikers of Merthyr Tydfil lost in all some £30,000 in wages because of their action, and they simultaneously lowered their stand-ing in the eyes of their neighbours. Cui bono? And in case anyone is thinking that some profoundly important principle was involved in the strike, let me reveal that it was called because a part-time barmaid was appointed in the local leisure centre and the union claimed that another applicant should have got the job.

This circle will one day be squared. It will happen either because a sufficiently substantial figure will appear, to lead the labour movement in honourable and fruitful paths, who will be so strong and so determined that the labour movement's implacable hostility to being led in such paths will be overcome, or because the labour movement will continue to decline in numbers, strength, support, esteem, intelligence and character until it becomes a small and irrelevant part of our society, of no more consequence than the Flat Earth Society or the guardians of Joanna Southcort's Box.

All the evidence, most lately from Merthyr Tydfil, suggests strongly that they will choose the road to ruin. So be it; but it must be pointed out that there is an extra irony in this story. Merthyr Tydfil has a good claim to be the birthplace of the modern British labour movement. for it was the constituency that returned Keir Hardie to Parliament from 1900 until his death in 1915. Hardie spent his life, selflessly and devotedly, in hardship and obloquy, to raise the British working man in material sufficiency and - more important - self-respect. I do not think that he would greatly admire the action of those who, in the name of the movement he founded and led, tried to prevent a grieving husband from burying his dead wife. But it would be a waste of his time to try to shame them; why, if he were to turn in his grave they would only come out on strike to stop him.

Anne Sofer

The dark side of this free choice circles these days about hanging. To most people I know in the Labour, Liberal and Social Democratic parties, such conversations feel very odd indeed. Although abolition effectively took place in 1964, the discussion and campaigning was at its most intense some years before, as described in the extract from the Koestlers' autobiography in The Times last week.

It was really a 1950s issue, and many politicians now middle-aged will not have debated the matter seriously since their student days. For me it has an ironically nostalgic flashback quality — as if we were crowning the Queen again, or watching Sedgman win Wimbledon.

Or believing that enlightened re-forms once gained were irreversible. Suddenly we start speculating about individual Conservative colleagues - not, as before, is he a fullblown monetarist or not, is he for or against the abolition of the GLC, where does he stand on Fortress Falklands, but simply, is he a hanger? And the question has that same grisly fascination the act itself has always had: voyeuristic, faintly

I recently asked a GLC Tory, a ather right-wing one, I thought, the question direct. He gave me a very long and sour glance, then said he was unable to answer the question without bitterness; he had been rejected by more parliamentary selection committees than he cared to remember because of his refusal to commit himself to voting for restoration. He had tried to evade it, he said, by saying he thought there should be a referendum, but he was not allowed to get away with that. He had to say, yes, he was an out-and-out hanger. And he could not. The same evening I heard a similar story about another very able, thoroughly Thatcherite young Con-

If these stories are true, they are confirmation of what many of us have long suspected - that the Conservative Party is becoming more and more like the Labour Party in the way it conducts its most important function, the selection of parliamentary candidates. I expect to hear any day now of MPs being mandated by their local associations to vote for the return of hanging in Wednesday's debate.

There are probably several Tory MPs – less principled than my colleague, or more skilled in equivocation - who are desperately wishing the issue would go away. They no more want a return to the dark ages than their counterparts in the Labour Party want to abolish the monarchy, but they know they are in for a sticky time back at the grass roots if they vote against it. The best thing for them is what the Cabinet has thoughtfully provided: a debate called at such short notice that they can legitimately claim to have a prior engagement. You will probably find that a lot of important family function have been fixed for Wednesday July 13.

How many potentially good MPs have we lost through this dreadful practice of one-issue judgment?

There is a lot of talk in political Trollope's novels portray the corruption of power through domination by too few interests. Today we see the corruption of power through domination by too few opinions. In both the old political parties there are certain issues which activists now elevate into infallible litmus tests of a candidate's allround suitablity.

The interesting thing about political litmus tests is that they are not used to assess the loyalty of political aspirants to party policy. The issues chosen are those that are outside, or even against party policy, the issues local party activists regard as revealing the true colour, so to speak, of the candidate's soul. Is this person really one of us? The answer to this question, yes, or no. will tell us all.

Many litmus test questions (hanging in the Conservative Party, support for Sinn Fein in Labour) are edged with the taste of fear and violence: they are initiation rites. tests of political manhood.

· The correct and winning answer will almost certainly be couched in terms that are contemptuous, if not outright abusive, of accepted wisdom on the subject, particularly if that accepted wisdom represents a cross-party consensus. "I'm not afraid to go in and change all that nonsense" is the right tone to adopt. It is necessary to sound blunt, abrasive and intolerant (as much like Rhodes Boyson or Dennis Skinner as possible). It is not necessary to know anything about the issue

Now it is wholly right to have new MPs who are fearless catalysts of change. The problem is that the litmus test process is far more likely to produce craven conformists of a new sort: people ready to jump when somebody tells them to jump. During the last year I was in the Labour Party the instruction to jump was being given at shorter and shorter intervals, rather like a sadistic ringmaster going off his head. Support the hunger strikers! Let Tariq Ali join! Defy the NEC over Militant! Break the District Auditor! Boycott the Scarman Inquiry! Disrupt Parliament! Are Conservative associations going to start acting the same way? One huge difference lies between them, and it is one we should all take very seriously. Whereas the litmus tests that left-wing activists choose are such as to lose votes by the million (just read the list above). Tory litmus tests are far closer to public sentiment. Those ladies in hats and those local estate agents are no fools. They know the popular appeal of their harder-line attitudes - not just on hanging but on immigration control and social security "fraud" as well,

It is an appeal to the darker side of human nature, the side that needs retribution and scapegoats and ritual cleansing, and it is an appeal that grows stronger in times of hardship and uncertainty. It's that we have to worry about most.

Tory cuts come out of the closet

During the general election campaign Labour spokesman war-ned the electorate that, behind the innocuous vacuities of the published Conservative manifesto, there lurked a hidden manifesto containing the Government's real, discreditable programme. Labour forecast that Mrs Thatcher was preparing to reduce the spending power of pensions and other benefits, to move towards dismantling the National Health Service, to cut dole payments in real terms and to damage the social sector by discriminatory reductions in public expenditure.

These accusations were indignantly denied by the Conservatives, and in the election, it seems by the voters too. Now scarcely, a month after polling, Labour is unassailably placed to declare smugly: We always told you there was a hidden manifesto, didn't we?

One after another have come the ministerial announcements. First Norman Fowler, the Social Services Secretary, told the House of Commons that, though inflation in November will be "around 6 per cent", retirement pensions and other benefits will be increased only by the May inflation figure, 3.7 per cent. Recipients will accordingly be mulcted of £1.20 a week for a pensioner couple and 75p for a single pensioner.

Mr Fowler was a busy man. A week later he disclosed what he described as his growth plans for the NHS. These, in the terms in which he stated them, mildly encouragingly implied a real increase in expenditure for the next 10 years of 0.5 per cent per annum. This, however, was not guaranteed, but depended on the economy doing well enough to justify such munificence. It was also based on the assumption that the 0.5 per cent growth could be found from internal efficiency savings.

What is more, it completely ignored increased demand for the NHS: the rise in the number of the elderly as a proportion of the population means that simply to maintain the service requires a 0.7 per cent growth above the pay and prices index. So Mr Fowler's 0.5 per cent increase actually turns out to be a cut ranging between 0.7 per cent and 1.2 per cent per annum, with these reductions being kept within that level only if the economy performs well.

Then, last weekend, we had the egregious comments on unemploy- Manchester, Gorton.

ment benefit from Nigel Lawson, the new Chancellor. After his insinnations about the inherent idleness of certain of the unemployed, there was a tremendous flurry of denials that the Government had any baneful designs on their dole money. Next, however, came the Prime Minister's explanation, drafted with painstaking care: "In our manifesto we pledged: In the next Parliament, we shall continue to protect retirement pensions and other linked long-term benefits against rising prices'. Unemployment ben-efit is not a linked long-term as we explained. Therefore, no long-term pledge about price protection was given. These words can be translated as follows: We lied to the pensioners, but tricked only the unemployed.

The latest instalment came four days ago, with Mr Lawson's abrupt announcement of £500m of spending cuts, with health, the social services and education all desig-nated as prominent victims. On Tuesday Mrs Thatcher had quoted from the published manifesto. On Thursday we were treated to more extracts from the authentic, concealed version. The true nature of what has been taking place was thus described in the Daily Telegraph, symbiotically tuned in as it is to the intricate thought processes of Conservative ministers: "Some political barriers are felt to have been removed now the election is out of the way."

Labour, therefore, is justified in saying: We told you so. The problem is that during the election campaign too few voters listened because attention was skilfully distracted by the Conservative Party, which instead managed to convince the electorate that Labour's published manifesto was more of a menace to them than anything the Tories might be hiding. Now, when the Labour warnings are day by day seen to be vindicated, the electorate is still distracted from paying heed.

This time the diversion is an internal leadership election campaign which is lasting as long as an American presidential election campaign. For the next three months, Roy Hattersley, Eric Heffer, Neil Kinnock and Peter Shore are doorned to go around the country each giving reasons why he rather than any of the others should be Prime Minister, when all four ought unitedly to be saying why Mrs

Thatcher should not be. The author is Labour MP for

There can be little doubt that in such a war Iran has the advantage. For this there are two main reasons.

First, Iran has the larger population and more abundant resources of almost all kinds. Secondly, geography enables Iran to blockade Iraqi oil exports through the Gulf but not vice versa. Only a trickle of oil is getting out of Iraq through the pipeline to Turkey. But for financial support from Arab neighbours, and arms supplied almost free of charge by France, Iraq would long ago have been forced to surrender.

Even as it is, Iraq has difficulty paying for essential imports, and its industrial and social development programmes have been suspended sine die. Iran by contrast has an excellent credit rating and has lately relaxed controls on imports. British exports to Iran, for instance, are now actually higher than those to Iraq.

peace is in its interest too. The civilian population of Western Iran has been subjected to repeated missile attacks. Shipping in the vicinity of Iran's ports has also been hit, and attacks on Iranian oilfields are mainly responsible for the vast oil slick which is now polluting the Gulf and wreaking havoc, as the World Wildlife Pund reports, among its population of dolphins, turtles, fish, sea snakes and birds. It may even have exterminated the dugong or sea cow altogether,

Iran would be happy to have international teams come in and cap the leaking wells, but Iraq refuses to guarantee them safe passage unless there is an agreed ceasefire covering the whole area

Turns of the screw on death penalty

the law that the penalty for murder From Sir Arthur Peterson But it cannot be stressed too

Sir, The recurrent debates on the death penalty have added a new consideration to the familiar arguments on this subject. It seems likely that for many years to come the personal views of future Home Secretaries will be public knowledge.

If the death penalty is restored and the Home Secretary remains responsible for advising on the Royal Prerogative (and no one has yet suggested an acceptable alternative), this will give an added turn of the screw to the strain which the Home Secretary has to bear in making decisions on particular cases and will make it even more certain that each one will be the subject of intense controversy.

When I was Private Secretary to Mr Chuter Ede in the period leading up to the first abolition of the death penalty I saw this trend developing, and it is easy to see how rapidly it would develop in the new situation and with the growth of the media, particularly television

It seems likely that continued expressions of abhorrence for the use of the penalty would weaken whatever value it has as a general deterrent.

Children's interests in divorce cases

From Mr John Eekelaar

Sir. The decision in Richards v Richards (Law Report, July 1) makes urgent a review of the divorce law. Suppose a marriage breaks down but the parties are unable to use (and unwilling to fake) the conditions for immediate divorce (adultery, "behaviour") or one of them (for tactical reasons?) will not petition. Divorce can be had only after separation for two or five years.

If a husband, unwilling or unable to look after the children, refuses to leave the home, despite the more modest requirements for housing a single man, either the mother must leave with the children, or she must stay and live a "separate" life under one roof (hardly desirable or even possible where there are children) or be denied a divorce.

If she leaves, in order to satisfy the conditions for divorce, you apparently regard with equanimity (leading article, July 2) the fact that this may seriously compromise the children's welfare and that the courts should refuse to ameliorate argue powerfully why the death penalty should not be restored. But their position. In fact, the decision in Richards there is a change in the law relating to murder which it would be worth does not dictate this consequence, because it leaves open what is to be making namely to give to judges the power to impose whatever length of sentence they consider appropriate.

Some of the present argument centres on the fact that the courts cannot in their sentencing discrimidone if the needs of the children conflict with the interests of one adult vis-à-vis the other. This itself is unfortunate because these de-cisions will be left to the unguided discretion of judges in the same manner as the (much criticized) cannot in their sentencing discriminate between different cases of murder. The husband who kills his terminally ill wife out of compassion has to be given exactly the same present maintenance law.

If the conflict is not resolved in accordance with the children's needs the hollowness of the protestations that, in divorce, the children should suffer the least is revealed.

The genuineness of our allegiance to children's interests becomes apparent only when they no longer coincide with the adults' interests and perception but conflict with them. But children have no votes and form no pressure groups. They are rarely represented in divorce proceedings. They seldom write to The Times. Their interests are under a growing threat. Yours sincerely,

Stress on unemployed

From Miss Hilary Muggridge Sir, The Medical Research Council, in a television programme on June 21, revealed that their recent research into the effects of unemployment seems to point to the conclusion that the longer a man is unemployed the more likely he is to attempt suicide. Apparently after about 18 months on the dole, men are 19 times more likely to try to take their own lives than men who are not unemployed.

Kenneth Clarke, the Health Minister's, response to this disturbing revelation was as follows:

ils come with his worst African problem to date and could lead to the knottiest of his foreign policy entanglements. There is probably a gruelling debate among the several centres of power that have traditionally woven French African policy together: at the Elysée the President's own conseillers and the often rather autonomous intelligence services; the Quai d'Orsay under M Cheysson; and the ruling Socialist Party, part of whose Third World lobby is intensely hostile to what it sees as the neocolonialism of all recent French presidents. It is not that the fate of Chad has crucial strategic or economic implications, either for France or for the West. But French handling of the problem could be of great symbolic significance to Africa and to the rest of the world. To this M

Mitterrand is clearly sensitive. President Habré, the now increasingly beleaguered incumbent in Ndjamena, the Chadcapital, has had chequered relations with France. In the 70s he was a leader of the northernbased insurrection against the regime then militarily backed by France. It was he who kidnapped and held the French ethnologist Mme Claustre for over two years and murdered a French major dream of a ran-Islamic Saharan sent to negotiate her release. But empire under his own evangelisince last year, when his faction cal tutelage; it would be viewed won recognition as government as a serious blow to French by right of conquest and control of the capital, the French have backed him heavily. FRENCH HEADACHE IN CHAD has made no secret of his desire to secure a client government in Chad and to annex a northern slice of the country thought to contain uranium. M Goukouni, too, has had variable relations with France, which strove to wean him away from the Libyans during his brief tenure of office in Ndjamena. Now, however, he is tightly back in the Libyan embrace.

Both before and since Colonel Gaddafi's humiliation at the Organization of African Unity last month, when he was forced to concede the chairmanship he had never formally assumed, the Libyans have been massively increasing training and armssupplies for M Goukouni, who last week captured Chad's major northern town and now appears to have gained the strategic eastern city of Abéché as well. So M Habré is beseeching France for greater help. The question for M Mitterrand is how far can he risk France once again being ensnared into "le guèpier tcha-dien" (the Chad wasps' nest), as

Le Monde calls it If M Goukouni were to defeat M Habré, it would be seen not just as a step towards the fulfilment of Colonel Gaddafi's prestige. Furthermore, it would create great anxiety among many francophone states which have hitherto been reassured by the

of Togo, Niger and the Ivory Coast recently flew to Paris to urge M Mitterrand not to let M Habré fall. The Americans, too. have been active behind the scenes, while the Sudanese and Egyptians are giving M Habré whatever arms they can muster. France, indeed, is sending considerable military supplies post haste. M Mitterrand says he will help "without limits" but strictly within the context of a cooperation agreement that rigorously excludes direct French fighting involvement "either to maintain order or to reestablish it". The nearest thing to direct French involvement canvassed at present is the despatch of Jaguar aircraft to harass the Goukouni forces, but even that degree of intervention is most unlikely.

It is thought that M Mitterrand, who has already visited eleven African states as president, is loath to abandon France's traditional role; M. Cheysson is considered less emotional, perhaps more pragmatic; more doctrinaire Socialists within the administration are fiercely against any African escapade smacking of Giscardien hauteur or Gaullist paternalism. Instead, the Quai is trying to rally other African countries to the Habre cause: Zairois troops have already been flown in. But will they be able to stem the Libyan tide? If not, an era of high-risk French assertiveness in Africa could be ending.

Sir, What a silly, petulant and indeed rather bitter-sounding letter from Sir Woodrow Wyatt (July 6). It is most unfortunate to suggest that MPs are "demanding up to a 30 per cent rise for a very part-time job". There is no question of the House demanding anything - these figures are based on the recommen-dations of an independent commission and MPs now have the difficult task of responding to these suggestions.

From Mr Barry Jones Sir, Mr Arthur Scargill was heard on television today as saying: "I am not prepared to accept policies imposed by a government elected by a minority of the electorate."

Abolition of GLC

From Mr Alan Lee Williams Sir, David Walker's excellent articles on the GLC (Spectrum, June 29) highlight the incontrovertible case in favour of the abolition of the GLC As a former Labour member of Parliament I strongly favour the abolition of the GLC and the transfer of all existing duties and services to the London boroughs, with the exception of a number of strategic functions like those associated with land use, transportation (including highways) London transport and refuse disposal, which should be incorporated in a new authority covering the GLC area.

The 'overwhelming case abolition does not lie simply in the GLC's obvious inefficiency, ram-pant duplication of services and lack of genuine strategic role, but in its almost total lack of concern for the plight of the private sector of

The GLC's so-called "chief economic planner" has given vent to his marked bias against the private sector, as shown in the so-called London industrial strategy (tabled last February by the GLC at the Greater London Manpower Board). There is no, or little recognition in his so-called strategy that London's relative economic decline is related to both national and international trends as well as to the long-term effects of the decentralisation policies pursued until 1976.

He also ignores the fact that recent increases in both rents and in London have greatly exceeded those of many principal provincial centres. London rates have tended to increase more frequently than rents and dramatically faster than inflation and these are decisive factors in forcing companies to leave London.

I believe that the GLC grossly underestimates the harmful impact of rent and rate increases on the could have six or seven-year-old general level of economic activity in the capital. The explanation for this lies in the GLC's basic attitude towards the mixed economy, which can be seen in its callous attitude towards the non-domestic ratepayers. These disfranchised ratepayers can no longer be expected to sustain the GLC's runaway levels of expenditure. The fact remains that as the GLC's role diminishes its overstaffed bureaucracy of some 20,000 people continues to grow. The GLC. of course, only pretends to reduce its 1983-84 budget by balancing and not reducing its expenditure. This will, in my view, create severe financial consequences for the budget in 1984-85. Further staggering rate increases are certain to follow. London can no longer afford the Sale of venison

From Sir David Scott Sir, Dr Fletcher (July 6) seems to imply that venison has no specific flavour of its own until it starts to putrefy. This is not so, It has a flavour as distinct, say, from beef as beef has from mutton or hare from rabbit. He also says that build wounds and inadequate bleeding produce a gamey flavour. This does not apply to park deer, almost always fallow, which are invariably killed by rifle shot in the head and have their throats cut immediately to promote bleeding. This method of slaughter has no effect on the flavour of the flesh. He also suggests that the "fresh" deer flesh he sells from red deer killed at three years old has "the authentic taste enjoyed by our ancestors." This is improbable. the Christian faith which he Cathedral Chapter. gave during Lent in 1981 when on six successive weeks he drew from 1500 to 2000 people to the City Hall in Hull.

Born in 1921, Geoffrey Paul grew up in South London. From the Rutlish School at Merton he went on to Queens' College Cambridge and thence to King's College London, to take the Master's Degree in Theology. There he was one of many men of evangelical persuasion who owed much to the influence and friendship of Eric Abbott, the Following a curacy at Little Ilford, he offered for service abroad with the Church Missionary Society in 1950. Though sent as chaplain to St John's College, Palayamcotta among the Tamils of South India, he was required, for no apparent reason to learn Malayalam; he was actually being groomed to follow Doctor Lesley Brown, then Principal of the United Theological College of Kerala, whom Archbishop Fisher had already selected to become the new Bishop of Uganda. During his first local leave his fiancée, Pamela Watts, joined him and they were married in Colombo, with Lesley Brown as the best man. Twelve months later they moved to the College in Kerala where he was to spend the next thirteen years on the staff, four of them as Principal.

Warm yet undemonstrative unpretentious to the point of shyness, Geoffrey Paul showed remarkable flair for getting alongside the Indian students from all the denominational backgrounds that had made up the Church of South India. He also won the confidence of leaders in the ancient Syrian Church and among the Mar Thoma Christians, And, somewhat to their alarm, he seemed able to make good relations with many of the Communist leaders who were the ruling party in the State of Kerula. The two short commentaries he write for the Christian Students Library of India on the Gospel of Mark and the Gospel of John deserve to be more widely known.

When he was 44, the Pauls returned to England and a year later Bishop Oliver Tomkins invited Paul to join the staff of

. In 1971 he became Warden of the Lee Abbey Community on the North Devon coast, a centre for the promotion of spirituality and evangelism with considerable residential community of lay men and women. Though still only 50, he had developed the aura of an older man and, by being a father figure, gave stability and confi-dence to a mixed group struggling with the difficulties of communal life.

Their own close knit family of five lively daughters enabled the Pauls to nurture the young members with great sympathy and vision to the Community's understanding of evangelism, challenging their fears of the world and their false distinction between the religious and the secular, He invited more varied and more intellectual speakers to address their conferences, and made fuller use of the creative arts.

At that time the International Club and Hostel which the Community ran in London for Overseas students was under pressure from those who thought it peripheral to their main purpose but Geoffrey Paul helped them the see it as a most positive form of Christian

After six years he was appointed Suffragan Bishop of Hull. For the first time he felt the disadvantrage of his lack of first hand parish experience, but his gifts as a teacher of the faith, a man of prayer, a leader of the church's evangelism and a promoter of ecumenical cooperation, were more than compensation.

He very quickly mastered the complexity of diocesan structures so that, when he was advanced to the See of Bradford in 1981, he knew immediately bow to reshape its committees and turn the diocese around from maintenance to mission. Many had hoped to see the same theological grasp and organisational clarity brought to bear upon the Church of England's Board of Mission and Unity of which he had recently been made chairman in succession to Bishop David Brown.

The church can ill afford his death at this moment, but invited Paul to join the staff of "untimely" was not a word in Bristol Cathedral as Director of his vocabulary.

Beggar's opera?

Opera has always been an expensive art. If it is not now to shrivel, special efforts are needed, and the nature of those efforts is becoming abundantly clear as the major houses announce their plans for next season. In Paris next January Die Entführung is to be mounted in a joint production with La Scala. At Covent Garden the evidence of economy is still more pronounced: of seven new productions, four will be borrowed in some manner from other theatres.

HALL BRIDGE

This is not altogether new, and certainly not in this country, where opera companies have always had to cut their cloth with unusual finesse. Scottish Opera and the Welsh National have collaborated on many occasions, notably on the cycle of Janacek operas which Cardiff brought to its conclusion last autumn. The English National Opera, too, has secured strong links of dam, where the Queen of Spades was first seen, and with Geneva, receiving Mireille next season.

Royal Opera, might reasonably feel wary of indulging in this trade. If the same productions were too often to be seen at should have come about. Covent Garden and the Metro- Covent Garden has tried doing certain world travellers: more proved notoriously disastrons importantly, it could dull the with the previous production enthusiasm of the singers, there of Manon Lescaux: it destroy any sense of house style proved eminently successful in and lead, more than happens the case of Elijah Moshinsky's

Sir John Tooley, general director of the Royal Opera, insists nonetheless that he has never been against borrowing productions from other houses or mounting joint productions. In fact, though, such occasions have been rare: a Lombardi abroad, especially with Amster- borrowed from Budapest a decade ago, a Falstaff produced that recently blazed on London in association with Los Angeles and Florence last year, and a whence the Coliseum will be Manon Lescaut taken faute de mieux from Hamburg earlier However, a company of this season. In the light of this international standing, like the record, the borrowing of four productions next season has to look like a change of policy.

It is not hard to see why it politan, this would be a bore for productions on the cheap. It already, to performances that staging of Peter Grimes - which, are routine and synthetic.

Sir John Tooley, general loaned to other house. Clearly it is an economy better practised on operas of a spere visual character - Grimes, or perhaps Womeck - but certainly not suited to those which require opulence, spectacle and magic.

Covent Garden has also tried productions: this season, partly by accident, there has only been one. Semele, plus the borrowed Manon Lescant, But this 100 will not do. An opera house's laurels are ever prone to fade and cramble. It will not keep an expert technical staff of it offers them no new challenges, and it will not keep an audience if all it can offer are occasional new voices in the same old clothes. There are already ancient Royal Opera productions which could well be retired. The prospect of the backlog becoming even greater is not one to ponder for To borrow and to combine resources are then the only practical solutions for an opera company under financial dur ess, and the economic advan-tages are considerable. Next February Covent Garden will be taking Cologne's Andrea Chénier for about a third of the cost of a new production, paid as a hire fee and in transport costs. Last season the house got its new Falstaff for 60 per cent of the budget, the remainder being divided between Los Angles and Florence, where the production was to be staged for ust a single run, London keeping the sets and costumes. These are two of the possibilities. First a straight borrowing of the production and all its impedimenta, agreed either after the production has been seen (as with the San Francisco Esclormonde next season at Covent Garden) or at an earlier stage, as happened in the case of Andrea Chenier. Second, a collaboration arranged in advance. But other mechanisms of working together are possible. The double bill of L'Efant et les sortileges and The Nightingale, which will be staged at Covent Garden in September, will have new scenery and costumes after the designs that David Hockney did for the Metropolitan, and John Dexter will be adapting his production for the Royal Opera House, just as Lotfi Mansouri will be coming to take charge of his Esclarmonde and Michael Hampe of his Andrea Chénier, Indeed, Covent Garden would always require that the original producer, designer and lighting designer, or their assistants, were available. Companies borrowing from the Royal Opera have to abide by the same condition.

What may still make collaboration awkward is an immense array of practical difficulties. The Covent Garden stage does not have facilities that productions in other theatres may assume: scenery cannot, for instance, be rolled off to the side. Also, our fire regulations tend to be more stringent than those of other countries, so that scenery may have to be reconstructed in other materials. There may also be problems quite simply in fitting a production made for one stage

For all these reasons and others, combined efforts among opera houses are unlikely to become much more numerous than they will be next season at Covent Garden. It is, in particular, hard to imagine that it would be worthwhile for a company to bring in a foreign production of a standard-repertory piece, likely to be needed every other season. But borrowing, copying and sharing may bring us all more rare and new works, enlarging an operation experience that has to be stimulated too by productions that a company creates for itself according to its own lights.

PUBLISHING Winning ways

I once met an author who had not won a literary award, at least not for decades. His name although his name is bandled about every year - not by the swedish Academy which intherto forgotten and out-of-awards the Nobels - as being in print romantic novelist, has some short list, but he is driven a coach and four through probably regarded as too popular, 100 mainstream. Nor has he won what was, until the other day, the best-paying British prize, the Booker. Sensibly, he does not allow his publishers, the Bodley Head, to submit his work for prizes.

British literary prizes have proliferated over the last few years, It is in the lazy summer months that many are presented at embarrassing little cere-monies, while authors or their monies, while authors or their publishers are preparing other submissions for the autumn round. The National Book League, which "administers" quite a few of the awards, arranged for Iris Murdoch — who in 1978 distributed to the needy most of her own Booker winnings - to hand out envelopes containing various sums. The fashionable Lisa St Aubin de Teran received two prizes for her first novel, including the Somerset Maugham, worth £1,000. Mr Maugham intended his prize to enable authors under 35 to travel: Ms de Teran, who has lived in South America, must be one of the most travelled young British authors around. The Hawthornden, perhaps the most distinguished of all - judging by previous recipients - is for an author under 41, and is worth £500. Timothy Mo, who has just won it, should clearly resign all his other jobs immediately and write his third novel on the munificent hand out. The truth is that there is a ludicrous number of awards on offer ranging from, say, the Arthur Markham Memorial Prize for manual workers in or about a coal mine or - to extend dramatically potential winners - who have been injured when so employed; to the Frederick Niven of £100 awarded every three years to a Scottish novelist but - and here is the drawback if no work submitted reaches a sufficiently high standard the award may be withheld; so the Angel Literary Prize - a newcomer to the stakes - guessed - East Anglia. The Booker prize-money is was Green, or Greene, something like that.

Up to a point, I jest. Graham Greene has not yet won the Nobel Prize for Literature, 153,000 each year) and the 153,000 each year) and the 153,000 each year) and the 153,000 each year)

£3,000 each year) and the W.H.Smith (£2,500) runnersdriven a coach and four through these sums, if not through their literary pretensions, by leaving a bequest of £400,000 for the best romantic novel by an author under 35. Might the young Jane Austen have been eligible, or George Eliot, or Charlotte and other Brontes? He, or most likely she, should receive not less than £40,000

Like many others, Ms Trask's will requests the Society of Authors to "administer" the prize. The first joke is that she did not herself deign to join the society. The second is that the money derives not from her royalties but from an inheritance. Would it have been preferable it she had paid her subscription to the hard-up Society of Authors and left her money to the Battersea Dogs'

Literary prizes in this country, as for years has been the case in France, are bringing literature - as opposed to publishers' underpaying for, underselling and hyping of new books - into disrepute. Most literary prizes are for fiction, and most of the prize-winning books are unread a year or two later. How many Booker or Whitbread or Smith (they tend to go for tradition, for class) prize-winnners can you name. or have you read?

Because most books are selected by more than one person - usually other writers the winner of any prize is likely to be a compromise, a worthy, inosfensive, unexceptionable book rather than a firecracker, a subversive masterpiece. There is no barm in literary prizes provided that everybody understands they do not - cannot - go to "the best books". In spite of, usually, the intentions of the donors, they are a device to help promote an otherwise improbable product. Posterity will decide which books should be read in decades to come. When Graham Greene alone (well, almost alone) is not winning prizes it makes you wonder who

No one knew who had shot him in Conception Street where they have obviously learned to duck when the bangs start and which has several thriving funeral parlours to house those who fail to or who don't get the chance.

The front line in El Salvador is everywhere and the film crew assiduously and bravely covered the ground; government barracks, guerrilla camps, a rally of the right-wing Arena party, and, finally, the home of the leader of a right-wing death squad. He appeared in silhouette, advisedly in view of his story; to say he was not a monster because he had a wife and children, obviously believ-THAT CO-DADITATION breeding preclude sin.

He admitted to killing 23 people himself. To torture with hot spoons to the eyes and blow-torches to the armpits -"the same thing you did in Victnam," he told the interviewer.

The trouble with this film, by Jeff Harmon and Chris Wenner, was that it made no attempt to set the way in context, assuming in its audience a grasp of the Latin-American scene that is surely wrong and possibly dangerous. Sensation is no substitute for information.

The long march to BBC's omplete Shakespeare continued last night, rather tedious-ly for me, with Cymbeline, the plot of which would make one of Raymond Chandler's thrillers straightforward by compari-son. He used to rid himself of surplus characters by having a man come in with a gun. In Cymbeline nearly all survive to the last scene and the great unravelling when boggles the

There was nothing labyrin-thine about David Leland's last offering in Central's Made in Britain series of plays on education: a violent close-up of 2 16-year-old skinhead (well lapersonated by Tim Roth, who has a future when his hair grows) with a swastika on his brow and, we were led to believe, some intellingence behind it. He rejected us all and that was the message. I reject him - and that's mine.

"I wonder if people are really interested in what actors want to do?" muses Connie Booth. The trouble is I'm not good at thinking on my feet". She lacks, perhaps deliberately, the range of anecdotes and responses required of most show-business people who are periodically wheeled out by their publicists. This may be a result of her rather odd career. After a solid background of stage work in America, where she was born, she married John Cleese and came to England in 1968. Cleese had been building up a coterie following in the States but back in England he became a star. His wife had to adjust and her own career ground to a halt for the first few years.

Slowly she began again but - appropriately or ironically depending on the point of view it was Cleese wito provided her break. She co-operated with him in writing Fawlty Towers and played the role of Polly, the maid whose relative normality created perspective for the mounting lunacy around her. The phenomenal success of the series placed her at once in the instantly recognizable category and also gave her the uncomfortable suspicion that she would be permanently associated with the role.

The Cleeses were divorced in 1978 and Ms Booth now lives in a Hampstead terrace in the tiny garden of which she spoke - and often fell silent - to the obligatory accompaniment of vapping terriers and ignored burglar alarms. The collabora-tion with Cleese has left her with the ambition to write on her own and for some years she has been struggling with a play, the details of which she keeps to herself. But meanwhile she has given a fine and admired performance in The Story of Ruth on BBC 2 as well as having a disastrous two-week run in the West End in The Little Lies - an adaptation by Joseph George Caruso of Pinero's The Magistrate - is again a comedy and again she does not see herself as the centre of the gags: "There is humour in the part but I just have to play it my way and hope the audience laughs." It comes to London after an unusually long provincial tour which began inauspiciously with Dominic Guard having to pull out after he was beaten up on his way home from a football match at Fulham. He has rejoined the cast now but the incident evidently shook the cast.

Yet, in spite of that and the experience of The Housekeeper, she is regarding the opening strong identity as an actress. she is regarding the opening Even the role of Polly now turns with equanimity. About six

Oddly, two of the three works in

Peter Donohoe's piano recital

on Saturday night were transcriptions. Stravinsky's three-movement Petrushka suite, made by the composer for Rubinstein, is familiar enough.

Mr Donohoe nevertheless discharged it with a high-powered brilliance and range of colour that seemed to transcend all normal-keyboard limitations. It was breath-taking. Liszt's transcription of Beethoven's "Eroica" was a more quixotic undertaking. Unlike the operatic paraphrases, this is no flamboyant show-piece, but a faithful reproduction of what the composer actually wrote in all textural detail. And because harder to bring off. Now and again (though never in the splendid Scherzo) Mr Donohoe sounded over-insistent less than wholly successful in concealing that tunes meant to be sung with one or two over-weighted, octave-doubled basses in cli-maxes. The funeral march brought occasional reminders of the piano's inability to make a crescendo on a sustained note.

But the whole performance was still a tour de force in clarity and continuity of thematic thread.

Beethoven's "Appassionatat"

did most to reaffirm the quite exceptional strength and breadth of Mr Donohoe's music-making, underpinned by rock-like rhythm. Even in the slow movement the unusual depth and fullness of his tone reminded me of Arran. The finale, rightly unhurried in basic tempo, ended with an opening of the floodgates of elemental force. Yet nothing in the recital

The LSO's policy on repeating programmes during it Barbican series looks distinctly peculiar. Last week Rafael Kubelik completed his Brahms symphony cycle with Nos 3 and 4; that concert was given twice. Yet here, on Saturday night, was No 4 again, under a different conductor, Ivan Fischer, presumably too dissuading anyone who came earlier in the week from returning. (The same will happen again next Saturday, when Claus Peter Flor will take over "Kubelik's" New World Symphony.) The other work, however - Brahms's Violin Concerto with Boris Belkin - must have been rehearsed by Fischer himself for Thursday lunchtime's concert. His beat was strong, and his care in accompanying Belkin was considerable.

But the soloist did not help. Belkin is the model of a modern violin virtuoso: a silken, swee tone as he soars high on the E string, figuration tossed off with confident abandon (and accuracy). But beneath the beautiful sound there is only more beautiful sound. In the central Adagio he was already introducing a delicately softened rallen tando three bars after his entry; the pulse was continually slowed to make room for some felicity of decoration unrelated to the structure of the piece; and Brahms's invitation to a couple of bars of calando proved almost fatal.

Oddly, the first movement produced almost equally frustrating interruptions to its progress, and I thought the coda (which is indicated tranquillo, not half speed) might stop altogether until Jack Brymer pushed it on from the clarinet desk. Only in the finale did Belkin and Fischer sustain a pace and a mood, and the result

The Animals

Arranged as a clandestine warm-up for their impending American tour, Saturday night's event appears to have been the first collective performance by the five original Animals for 18 years. As such reunions go, it proved exemplary; the past was honoured, but the group's residual strengths were placed within a contemporary context both carefully plotted and enthusiastically executed.

The Animals were among the most imposing groups of the great British wave which swept the world in the middle 1960s. In every measurable way they were at least the equals of the Rolling Stones, and in many respects their superiors. Where the Stones plodded through their uniquely complacent revolution, the Animals acted out a genuine volatility most obvi-ously expressed in the erratic but hugely powerful singing of

Peter Gabriel is not an artist who has courted easy stardom since his departure from Genesis, Britain's most successful supergroup of the last decade. Indeed it is to Gabriel's credit that he preferred to replace the increasingly sterile fantasies of Genesis' pomp rock with a style more suited to his self-effacing riel's popularity has not diminished among his loyal following. He may lack charisma in the conventional sense, but the reaction to his performance at Selhurst Park was evidence of the rapport he has with his fans. An objective observer could have been forgiven for imagining himself in the midst of some communal therapy session.

The inference is not that far fetched. Much of Gabriel's material, in songs like "I Have The Touch" and "On The Air". is delivered with the fervour of healing shaman. Gabriel's subject matter and imagery draw heavily on Third World rituals and he is not afraid to change the mood of his show from the hard, angular rhythms of "Shock The Monkey" to the gentler bypnotic reflections of

Behind the singer a five piece band conveyed the appropriate shades of power and subtlety. The crowd were evidently delighted that Genesis drummer Phil Collins was there to bolster the rhythmic qualities of the songs; the dual drumming of Collins and Jerry Marotta working best on the immediately recognizable hit "Games Without Frontiers."

While much of Gabriel's repertoire is not to my taste, it is impossible to deny that he obtains a wide atmospheric range and his importance as an influence on the synthesiser duos infesting the charts cannot be underestimated. Emphasizing his own humility was the climactic number Biko, a tribute to the murdered African. The proceeds of the concert are going to the anti-spartheid Lincoln Trust.

City Editor's Comment

Balancing act with

No sane person would covet the Chancellor of the Exchequer's job at the moment. Just as Mr Nigel

Lawson and his colleagues

enter the critical few weeks during which they could decide to cut aggragate

government spending in 1984-85 below the White Paper target of £127,000m,

the Government's natural supporters in the City are growing daily more apprehensive about how govern-

In one respect, the City has no excuse for being baffled. The clear signal

ment debt will be funded.

The effect of such a system is to undermine international treaties designed to climinate or minimize the chance of com-panies and individuals paying tax on the same income in different places. Objection to double taxation is one of the philosophical foundations of tax theory and legislation.

But it is the sanctity of the other parts which is causing concern. Leaving aside the question of whether the Government needs to make another £2bn of spending cuts, there is a cruel frony in the danger that good house-keeping in Whitehall could result in an acceleration of monetary growth, another crucial part of the strategy.

Burden

The argument is that within the economy as a whole the sum of financial surpluses and deficits should be zero. The implication is that if the Government cuts its deficit, other groups' surpluses will fall or their deficits will rise.

If the burden falls most heavily on the corporate sector – as one must assume it would - bank borrowing will increase. And that imparts further

The easy solution should be issue gilts to soak up the excess money and fund the Government. Last year this was managed with a vengenace when the Government overfunded to the tune of £5 bn. By contrast, there has been no net overfunding ths year and instead the public sector has contributed £2.3 bn to the increase in sterling M3.

But it is just these circumstances which make the City so nervous about accepting government debt. If these money-supply and budget problems persist, they augur badly for inflation.

But issuing paper to give the yields which would quell such fears will push up rates generally when sterling is quite strong enough for most exporters.

Last week, the 3 million shares, which had been placed by brokers Northcote at 50p, opened up at 108p - one of the most spectacular debuts yet seen on the Unlisted Securities Market. After hitting a high of 125p on Thursday the shares encountered a little profit taking, ending the week at 113p – a massive 63p premium.

For those investors lucky enough to pick up the shares the delay of nearly three months in dealings, while the Stock Exchange carried out rigorous tests has been worthwhile. It is also a clear indication that the City is still prepared to invest in an idea with little, if any, track record to back up the company. Now it is all up to Mr Rippon.

Somerset's fall from grace

LEICESTER: Leicestershire (4 pts)

their time Leicestershire dealt Somerset a damaging blow in the John Player League at Grace Road, yesterday. Not only did their batsmen, with two exceptions, suffer the indignity of being ited down and near enough bowled out, but when the bowlers' turn came they, too, failed to make any impression. Batting collaspes last Wednesday were the ruination of both Kent and Lancashire in the Benson and Hedges Cup and yesterday Lancashire suffered again, collapsing to Underwood. Kent, whose problems had seemed the lancasted at the

The result was an overwhelming success for middle-of-the-table success for middle-of-the-table Leicestershire, and a first defeat for Somerset who, with victories for Sussex and Yorkshire, now find themselves in third place. After Gower's early dismissal Butcher and Briers combined effectively before Davison, in his engaging eager-beaver way, came to settle the matter.

The advent of Somerset, the League leaders, pulled in a big crowd, somewhere in the region of 6,000. A muggy, mid-morning baze was slow clearing, but by the time Gower and Butcher walked out to open Leicestershire's innings, it was pleasantly sunny and warm. With 197-runs to get, Leicestershire's and know, who set in the cases of quick runs, all the early Kent batsmen got runs. None though got a lot, a fact which owed more to some outstanding Lancashire outcricket than to tight bowling, well as Simmonds and McFariane both bounded. Tavare led the way with his 59 not out, compiled over the course of 25 overs, but until he hit the but ball prospects looken reasonably bright, too.

Somerset, who had been put in to hat, made a poor start, losing Roebuck and Richards in the first dozen overs. With Roebuck's previous fine innings giving him an average of close to 60, this was no small triumph. But Cook gained the richest prize when he bowled Richards for 13, and at that time, Richards was the League's leading Richards for 13, and at that time, Richards was the League's leading batsman with an average of 124.50.

Leicestershire's feeling of well being stalled a bit here, though, as Botham and Denning settled before caning the bowlers fast and slow. With these two going well, apprehension was spreading fast.

By the time Botham was some By the time Botham was gone, caught halfway to the boundary at mid-ou, he had hit Taylor for six behind square leg and 16 fours, making 64 in a dashing stand of 115 in 14 overs for the third wicket. He was warmly applicated as he came in.

Denning was out soon afterwards for a well-made 55 and here on, beyond a handful of good-looking strokes from Marks, it was Leicestershire all the way. Three good catches helped Person to three stiplets and another it is excellent.

For some reason the heity-looking tailenders, instead of swinging their bats preferred to thrust their pads at the ball or

Runs for the more venerable

By Ivo Tennant

Not for the first Saturday this season, the more venerable of the cricketing brethren caught the eye. The financial incentive to keep The financial incentive to keep going in the game has never been better, yet, as they will tell you, they play largely for the firm of it.

Take George Sharp, hardly one of the leading batting lights in the game. A good, solid professional, yet 15 years of the county circuit he has never scored a first-class century for Northamptonshira. On Saturday, mainly through employing the mow to good effect, he came within two runs of one against Yorkshire, When out, he kept his disappointment to himself.

Cricketers such as he, Balderstone, Amiss, Alan Jones, Shepherd and Woolmer, some of the day's men in form, have all had to face cricket, slings and arrows, and have gone back for more. Amiss, Jones and Woolmer made centuries, Balderstone and Shepherd dug Leiestershire and Gloucestershire respectively out of trouble.

Indeed, with championship leaders Middlesex playing the New Zealanders – praise be they turned out a full strength side – Armiss could not have chosen a more opportune moment to make his 84th first class 100. It came against Freez who like Warnickshire as bein inst class four it came against Essex, who like Warwickshire are challenging for the title. And Andy Lloyd, who must wonder what more he has to do to win an England cap, made 89.

There was a century, too, scored by Cowdrey, for Kent, off the Lancashire attack. Thus far it is his best-ever season, which is just as well, for in the wings lurk Potter and others, including his younger brother Graham. Of Colin Cowdrey's three sons, he is thought in layer the most potential. to have the most potential.

In case it might be assumed that overseas players were for once upstaged, Greenidge almost managed his fourth successive century, batting for Hampshire against Surrey, Instead Marshall, one of the joyous men of cricket, made it to three figures, and, for good measure, picked up two wickets and near removed Monkhouse's big toe in the

There was also the small matter of a five-wickets haul by Botham at Leicester, notable if only because it seems a rare event these days, almost as rare as a Somerset victory.

The highlight of this weekend's Rotsee regata was Saturday's encounter in the men's single sculls between world champions Kolbe of West Germany, Reiche of East Germany and the "floating Finn", the Olympic champion, Karppinen. Kolbe outclassed the field, breaking Karppinen's challenge while East Germany's world champion Reiche was beaten by his younge compatriot Uwe Mund.

But placing all this in perspective is impossible. The Soviet Union, the United States, Australia and New Zealand were all absent.

Margate, who is awaiting his A level results, was sixth in the Commonwealth Games. He did not enter the competition until the bar was at 2.00 metres but then he made unusual progress.

He took two attempts to clear 2.12 metres but immediately raised it to the record-breaking 2.25 and cleared that at his second attempt. After one try at 2.28, he called it a day and said: "I just did what I knew I was capable of and today it ali came right".

Among the junior girls, little Nicola Dilley showed the courage of a champion after being bundled out of the 800 metres. The 14-year old Bedford girl was bowled over with two other runners after 200 metres but bravely got to her feet and completed the course

despite suffering a suspected dislocation of the left shoulder. She had set the fastest qualifying time and was expected to be among the medals but won the hearts of the 5,000 crowd by battling to the finish despite pleas from her team manager to drop out. At the end she was taken to hospital in tears after

Bedtime comes early to help Hern see daylight

Dick Hern put his stamp of emerged from the starting stalls at authority on the John Smith's 8.35 and 8.45 respectively in his two Magnet Cup at York on Saturday, victories.

Plans for Saturday's winner will the 7-2 joint favourite and Willie be announced in due course. "An Carson home, they were not only saluting Lord Halifax's first winner out of court for the Extel on his home course, they were also acknowledging the patience and Hobbs, however, will be attempting skill of a a man who has trained the to repeat his 1974 triumph with winner of this coveted trophy on

As always, the result of this race will create form to follow for the resi will create form to follow for the rest of the season. Bedtime and Gay Lemur fought out their exciting duel cheen their ex and were followed home by Farioffa. The only hard luck story concerned African Pearl, who had to be virtually pulled up after a pin broke in his bridle three furiongs from home.

The only two previous races of the 17-hands high Bedtime's career had taken place round Windsor's figure of eight bends. "As he's managed to go round those turns I thought he was sure to show improved form at York". Hern said. "He didn't race as a two-year-old herents." The didn't race as a two-year-old because I wanted to give him time to develop his full strength. And I stakes and that Staves Niarcho's was delighted to win this race for Lord Halifax at York." The proud owner choed these sentiments—"Racing in the day must have woken Bedtime up". Bedtime had said in the Fountain Stakes and

At Lingfield, the return to form of the inrepressible Guy Harwood continued when Lyphard's Special recaptured his high class two-year-old ability, in the Truman Bitter Take A Reef in Goodwood's rich handicap with the runner-up Gay Stakes. "Let's say that my horses are on the way back." the trainer said. "Lyphard's Special looks as though he needs a mile and a quarter and we'll have to find a race for him." we'll have to find a race for him."

Later this week, Harwood, Hilliand other top men in the industry will be flying to Kentucky. Sangster and the other Northern Dancer "jetsetters" will also be making their rannual pilgrimage to Keeneland cager to exploit the residual value of the priceless blood flowing through the veins in the offspring of the 23-year-old prepotent stallion and of his sons. Gorytus is now likely to make his belated comeback against the 2,000 Guineas winner. Lomond, in the Sussex Stakes, Goodwood's European all-aged mile championship is also a target for the Eclipse States third, Tolomeo.

Hern also confirmed that his 12-lengths Oaks winner, Sun Princess, is on target for the King George VI and Queen Elizabeth Diamond Stakes and that Stavros Niarchos's The exploits of Shareel Dancer make them even hungrier to acquire the 17 colts and fillies sired by Northern Dancer and Nijinsky amongst the 790 lots that will be on offer at the Keeneland and at the Fasig-Tipton July sale. Miss Rowell's maiden voyage turns to gold

By David Powell

Sarah Rowell, in her first race Boston Marathos in April, was outside the south of England, won reduced to 2hr 24min 21sec for outside the south of England, won the women's marathon gold medal at the World Student Games in Edmonton, Canada, yesterday, In so doing, she confirmed she is the most likely successor to Joyce Smith as Britam's top competitor over the distance.

At 20, Miss Rowell is 13 years younger than the average age of the British women's marathon squad and less than half the age of the admirable Mrs Smith. Yesterday's marathon was her first since she asked Cliff Temple, who coaches Mike Gration, to be her advisor.

Before Lord Diplock, Lord Fraser of Tullybelton, Lord Roskill, Lord Bridge of Harwich and Lord

[Speeches delivered July 7] On the acquisistion of Hawker Suddeley subsidiaries by British Aerospace their statutory obligation to pay a final dividend to their former holding company was an obligation to pay a net dividend plus the appropriate tax credit so that together they amounted to a gross "franked payment" equal to the revenues certified as available to them, not a dividend equal to the certified revenue plus a tax credit as

The House of Lords reinstated the order of Mr Justice Dillon to that effect in unanimously uphold-ing the appeals of Hawker Siddeley Aviation Ltd and Hawker Siddeley Dynamics Ltd from the decision on December 6, 1982, of the Court of Appeal (Lord Justice Stephenson, Lord Justice Slade and Lord Justice Oliver) in favour of the respondents Hawker Siddeley Group plc.

Mr Andrew Park, QC, and Mr Edwin Glasgow for the appellants; Mr D. C. Potter, QC, and Mr Alan

LORD TEMPLEMAN said that the question was whether the former shareholders of the appellants whose shares were transferred by the Aircraft and Shipbuilding Industries Act 1977 to British Aerospace on April 29, 1977 were entitled under section 25 of the Act for the period from January 1 to April 28, 1977 to a dividend equal to the certified net revenue for that period plus a tax credit equal to the advance corporation 12x attributable to the dividend or whether the former shareholders were only entitled to a dividend of an amount which, together with the amount of the advance corporation lax attributable to the dividend, was equal to the certified net revenue plus a tax credit appropriate to the dividend.

The certified pet revenue of the first appellant for the relevant period was £3.6m. Mr Justice Dillon decided that the respondent who was entitled to all the issued share capital of the appellant immediately before April 29, 1977 was entitled to a dividend of £2.4m and to a tera dividend of £2.4m and to a tax credit of £1.2m equal to the advance corporation tax attributable to the dividend of £2.4m.

The Court of Appeal reversed that decision and held that the respondent was entitled to a dividend of £3.6m and to a tax credit of £1.9m equal to the advance corporation tax attributable to the dividend of £3.6m.

Sections 23 and 24 of the Act controlled the dividends permitted to be paid by the several companies, including the first appellants, whose shares were by section 19 transferred to British Aerospace or British Shipbuilders. The courtrol applied to the dividends paid applied to the dividends paid between the safeguarding date of March 17, 1975 and the date of transfer which in relation to the first appellant was April 29, 1977,

Hawker Siddeley Group plc v
Hawker Siddeley Aviation Ltd and Another.

Control was imposed in respect of periods of control defined as the last financial year ending before March 17. 1975 and any subsequent periods ending before April 29, 1977. The financial year of the first appellants corresponded to the calender year and therefore they had forced to the calender year and therefore they had four periods of control, namely the financial years ending December 31, 1974, 1975 and 1976 and the final period January 1 to April 28, 1977.

Section 25 of the Act directed that as soon as possible after April 29, 1977 there should be paid to the respondent, the sole shareholder of the first appellant immediately before that date "payments of dividend for the final financial" period... of such amounts as to ensure that the aggregate payments of dividend for that period ... are equal to the maximum amounts permitted under section 24...".

The final financial period was defined by section 25(4) as such part of the financial year during which the date of transfer, namely April 29, 1977, occurred as preceded that

Thus the respondent became entitled to dividends up to the entitled to dividends up to the prescribed maximum in respect of the first appellant's activities during the final financial period between January 1 and April 28, 1977. The dividends could not be group dividends because section 25 only operated after the first appellants ceased to be the subsidiary company of the respondent.

Section 25 entitled the respondent to a dividend which was a qualifying distribution and to the tax credit appropriate to it. In his Lordship's opinion the dividend which was a qualifying distribution must be equal to the maximum amount of dividend which was a qualifying dividend which was a qualifying dividend which was a amount of dividend which was a qualifying distribution payable under section 24. There was no justification in the words of the Act for payment under section 25 of dividends which were qualifying distributions equal in amount to the franked assuments franked payments permitted by section 24 of which qualifying distributions formed part.

Nor was there any justification for paying under section 25 qualifying distributions equal in amount to the maximum group dividend which could have been paid under section 24, first because group dividends were irrelevant to section 25 and second because qualifying distributions and group dividends were mutually incompat

The "maximum amounts permitted" under section 24 of dividends which were qualifying distributions for the final financial period of the first appellant were £2.4m which together with the advance corporation 1.2m estributes in ation tax of £1.2m attributable that distribution constituted the maximum franked payments of £3.6m permitted by section 24. Mr Justice Dillon was therefore correct in his decision, and the appeal was

London Borough Conneil Lord Justice Waller, Lord Justice Oliver and Lord Justice Goff [Judgment delivered] June 30]

There was no duty upon occupiers of premises so to protect their own premises as to prevent third parties over whom they had no control from eastering their neigh-bour's premises.

The Court of Appeal so held, allowing an appeal by the defendallowing an appeal by the defendants, the London Borough of Camden against a decision on March 25, 1982 of Mr Barry Chedlow, QC, sitting as deputy High Court judge (The Times, April 1, 1982) who awarded damages of £12,338 to the plaintiffs. Peri (Exporters) Lio, in respect of a theft by unknown third parties.

Mr Desmond Browne for the plaintiffs; Mr Michael Turner, QC and Mr John Trench for the LORD JUSTICE WALLER said m a reserved judgment that the defendants owned Nos 142 and 144 Southampton Row, London.

The plain tiffs were the tenants of

No 142 and used the basement for storage of, clothing in connexion with their business. The basement of No 144 which was unoccupied was separated from the basement of No 142 by an 18-in wall with no direct means of communication.

There, were no locks on the front door of No 144 and the door leading into the basement was off its hinges. Tramps and vagrants had been seen in the premises and there had also been's averal burglaries.

There had been a number of complaints to the defendants about the kick of security but nothing had been done about it. On May 22, 1977 thieves knocked a hole into the common basement wall between the two premises and through that hole a slim person was able to climb and steril over 700 garments.

The judge held that there was an absence of reasonable care on the part of the defendants in that they had continuously neglected to have known that vandals, tramps and undesirables were continuously on the premises and therefore it should have been foreseen that damage would ensue.

they were under a duty it would be to refrain from doing acts which could be foreseen to be very likely to cause damage and they were not in premises, the presence of unautho-rized persons in No 144 and the state of the doors and locks were such that the break-in and theft were foreseeable rendering the defendants liable.

court approach with caution the suggestion that there was liability for a third party who was not under the control of the defendant. The Jacht Co v Home Office (11970) AC 1004) and in Lamb v Camden London Borough ([1981] QB 625).

A very high degree of foresee-ability was required to impose a liability for the acts of an independent third party. The issue was whether the defendants ought to have had the plaintiffs as occupiers of No 142 in contemplation as being affected when directing their minds to the question of repairing the doors and locks of No 144.

It was sought to make the defendants hable for an omission to act. It could not be said that the defendants ought reasonably to have had in contemplation the fact

Whether or not an occupier of a house could ever be liable to a neighbour for an omission to act

there was no breach of duty by the defendants to the plaintiffs and accordingly the appeal was allowed.

Lord Justice Oliver and Lord Justice Goff delivered concurring judgments.

The defendants submitted that Solictors: David Alterman & they were not under any duty to Sewell; Barlow Lyde & Gilbert.

Overcrowding must be taken into account

Since the housing authority had not considered whether accommodation was reasonable for the applicants to occupy pursuant to Section 17(1) of the Housing and accordingly the applicant would (Homeless Persons) Act 1977, the not fall within section 17(1) as a authority's decision that the appliwere intentionally homeless

Regina v Eastleigh Borough had to be quashed, Mr Justice Council, Ex parte Beattie and Moolf held in the Queen's Bench Division on July 5.

HIS LORDSHIP said that if accommodation was overcrowded the authority could come to the conclusion that it was not reasonable for the applicant to occupy it person who had become intentionally homeless.

The Times guide to career development Putting on weight again recruitment, local government is starting to put back some of its weight. Employment within local authorities now accounts for 12.5 per cent of the workforce (compared with 12.1 per cent in 1979) and the signs are that councils are returning to the market-place to pick up some of the. graduates and professionals who they have missed out on for the past two

The range of professionals employed by town and county halls is surprisingly wide. Many qualified people - like librarians, planners, social workers, recreation officers, housing officers, trading standards officers, country park wardens, archaeologists and archivists - look to the public sector, almost exclusively, for their careers. Others - like lawyers, engineers, architects, accountants scientists and computer staff - have the choice of working in private industry. But in both cases the tremendous importance of local government in the jobs market has meant that the modest recruitment of recent years have added considerably to the problem of white collar and graduate unemployment.

The reason for the improvement in job prospects is clear. Having got rid of much of the "fat" in local government there was nothing left to cut without posing a schous threat to

After four years of cut-backs in Edward Fennell reports an increase in professional vacancies on local councils > the health of many vital services. In any case the atmosphere in local authorities has changed

> The new awareness of efficient management of resources has alerted many councils of the fact that it may sometimes be cheaper to employ more staff rather than to continue with expensive capital projects. For example care of the elderly in the community is cheaper than in council-run homes and hostels although it does involve employing greater number of social workers. Local government now sees itself in a more dynamic role than in the past, In places such as Sheffield and the Greater London Council it stems from a party political idealogy. But even in Conservative shire authorities the scope of activities is broadening.

According to Alan Fowler who heads up the Manpower Services Unit for Hampshire County Council—the largest non-metropolitan authority in the country - many conneils now feel that they have the chance, or the responsibility, to get involved in schemes which are of benefit to the conservation, educational and social projects employing considerable numbers are now operation within local authorities under the auspices of the community programme. The likelihood is that these will grow and become fixtures since they are both worthwhile in themselves and contribute to reducing unemployment.

Industrial regeneration is also becoming a priority. Hampshire, like many other authorities, has recently sponsored a unit to go out and sell the country, particularly abroad, as an ideal place for new industry. "The council feels that it has a responsibility for the economic health of the community ans so there is now a team marketing the country to overseas investors," days Mr Fowler.

This all seems a long way away from the traditional stick-in-the-mud image of town hall politics. And where local government has had a lack fustre image compared even with the Civil Service, Alan Fowler sees it becoming more attractive to the ambitious. "You don't have to make your career entirely in local government now because there is a growing two way flow with the private sector. And unlike the Civil Service, where the general administrators hold the top jobs, heads of department in local government are always profesonals in their own right which means career

You will have absorbed plenty of good advice, filled in an application form carefully and thought-over what you want to find out about the job and what questions you are likely to be asked. Most of us leave even a well-conducted interview feeling we have not done ourselves justice. What happens if you meet a bad interviewer? Despite his or her failings, can you still put yourself across and make a good impression?

Be prepared to be kept waiting. The disorganized interviewer often starts late. Use the time to calm down, read the company literature, go over your conriculum vitae or talk to other 5.14 461 14 candidates!

A bad interviewer can seem positively hostile towards the normal, sensitive applicant. When I went to my appointments board for advice on a second job after four years as a personnel officer, I was asked "Why did you go into personnel manage-ment after taking your degree? Only the throw-outs did that". The phrase has lingered after many-years! Your interviewer may seem aggressive; "Why are you suddenly thinking of going into mining/retailing/the motor industry when you read philosophy/ concentrated on languages? Marjorie Harris offers some tips on coping with an inexperienced interviewer interviewer may be nervous and inexperienced. Don't let him make you feel inadequate. Answer what seem unnecessary personal questions politely but firmly.

Even a well-trained interviewer can have an off day. He does not seem to have read your application form and asks you to repeat details you have already provided in full. If possible. elaborate on what you wrote, make the point that you are adding information and pause so that with luck he will note it down.

He may allow colleagues to burst in on what should be a private meeting or even make long telephone calls. Endure interruptions patiently they may give you some idea of the firm. Simply listen to what is being said over your head but be ready to speak if you are suddenly asked for an

The interview may seem too brief and casual; the interviewer may appeal to over sell a routine job; or he may do all the talking and endlessly extol the wonders of his firm; worse, he may run it down. Even he should ask if you have any questions or at-least will have to pause for breath least will have to pause for oreali.

Seize your chance, eg "you mentioned earlier... could I just add that that..." or "Although my qualifications/degree subjects do not seem directly linked with this appointment, they would help me to analyse the work you have outlined/take advantage of your training scheme/bring a practical approach to the job."

You should not expect red carpet eatment from every firm you apply to but, if you have to face a poor interviewer, or one who subjects you to the generally discredited "stress" interview to see how you react, you may over-hastily decide that you do not want to work there anyway. It is worth realizing that you are unlikely, except in a tiny firm, to be working for the preliminary interviewer. If you seem promising, he will refer you to the person who would be your boss. This gives you a second chance to ask questions about what you would actually do. Base your judgment on the interest and suitability of the job: the characteristics of the person to whom you would be responsible are secondary. Make full use of this opportunity to supplement what you have not been told by the interviewer and to redress his sins of omission by speaking positively about yourself.

 It is not often that an internal Ministry of Defence difference of opinion receives a public airing but tonight we are treated to a PANORAMA (BBC1 8.10pm) investigation into a row that has already led to the resignation of the Chief Naval Architect. The bone of contention is the design of Royal Navy warships. In one corner is the naval architects' department, supported by the First Sea Lord, Admiral Sir John Fieldhouse, in the other is David Giles, an Independent marine architect, who has top ministerial support. Giles believes that his designs offer the Royal Navy cheaper and better armed ships, his opponents are adamantly opposed to his ideas. The argument has already led to bitter exchanges between ministers, admirals, civil servants and scientists over whom should have the final word on the concerned they would be more inclined, to remain silent." He went on: "The valuable information and evidence which has recently begun to flow from converted terrists, sometimes described as supergrasses, would be jeopardized if people knew their former colleagues might hang."

Mr Prior said that far from deterring terrorism, executions would well lead to more acts of vengeance, killings and atrocitics against members of the security forces and others on a substantial scale.

He said that after opposing capital punishment for many years he had voted for the return of the death penalty for terrorists in 1975, but recognized that within a short time this was a "mistaken and emotional response". Long before he was closely associated with the affairs of Northern Ireland he had reverted to his former position.

The return of hanging would give the IRA more chances to use the skill they had demonstrated at turning terrorists into martyrs and drawing strength and support from executions.

He said the statistics showed why Northern Ireland considerations were crucial. If capital punishment had existed for terrorist murder during the past six years there would have been 19 cases in Northern Ireland for every one in England and Dr Garret Fitzgerald, the Irish Prime Minister, said yesterday it would be a disasfrous mistake to bring back the death penalty in Britain. It would lead to violence and death in Northern Ireland (our Dublin Correspondent writes). Joe Cahill, former IRA leader, once reprieved only three days before his execution. said that the reintroduction of hanging would be no deterrent to "freedom fighters".

 If captial punishment is reintroduced, prison governors strongly against will resign from the service. Mr Brittan was told in a letter from the governors's branch of the Society of Civil and Public Servants (our Home Affairs Correspondent writes).

If hanging does come back the governors will want to play no part in it. As forecast in The Times last Monday, "the vast majority of our members are voicing the

Hanging: The fundamental arguments

The House of Commons will decide on Wednesday - after an increasingly vociferous public debate - whether to restore capital punishment 14 years after its abolition.

MONDAY JULY 11 1983

According to all the recent surveys the outcome will be very close and could rest with a small group of MPs who have vet to make up their minds, or who have not disclosed their

According to Mr Leon Brittan, the Home Secretary. public opinion will play a crucial role in the Commons debate. The wide spread of views on hanging that will be enunciated in Parliament have been well rehearsed in recent weeeks. with the Church judiciary, police, prison officers and penal reform groups among those who have lobbied

In the run-up to the crucial debate these are some of the arguments which have been expressed - and on which MPs will have to decide.

Lord Brooke of Cumnor

Conservative Home Secretary from 1962 to 1964

I was the last Home Secretary to consider death sentences.

Before I took office I thought hanging was a uniquely powerful deterrent. After two years,

The pro-hanging lobby talks of death for terrorist crimes but then the whole problem of definition arises. A man's life can't be based on the drawing

In all I considered 12 cases given the death sentence. Six were reprieved and six went ahead. The moment of execution wasn't the most intense, rather the actual signing

As Home Secretary I didn't

shirk my duty and I think one person - rather than a committee - should be responsible for such decisions if that is the law of the land. But during my term of office, my opinions on the merits of hanging changed enormously.

I found it quite ineffective.

(during the election campaign)

 I believe a majority of people in this country would vote for the restoration of the death penalty. I, too, would do that, and have always done so when it comes up in Parliament, because I believe there are some people, with guns and weapons, who would be determined to shoot their way out of trouble but who would not do so if there was a death penalty.

Sir Robert Mark Mr Roy Hattersley Shadow Home Secretary Former Commissioner of the

- I am opposed to the return of capital punishment - opposed in principle and opposed without reservation. The state does not possess the moral right to take the life of a man or woman. Even if the death penalty were a deterrent, I would be opposed to its reintroduction, but there is no conclusive evidence to support the view that a return to judicial execution would reduce either the murder rate or the number of violent crimes.

Dr John Habgood,

new Archbishop of York

- I very much hope the Hopse

of Commons will decisively reject hanging. I can understand the pressures that lead people to want it. But I believe that deliberately to kill people ing deliberately to kill people in cold blood — and that is what hanging is — is debumanising to all involved. I don't believe that hanging will in the least diminish the perils of terrorism and I believe that to convict criminals. If canital punishment meant that unanimous jury verdicts were to be the only acceptable verdicts again the consequences for maintaining law and order would be disastrons. The way to reduce deliberate crime is not the severity of sentence but

- The overwhelming view of the police service is that capital punishment should be restored for murder. We accept there are degrees of murder and we are not saying all persons convicted of homicide should suffer the death penalty. In an increasingly violent society the state must be empowered to decide that, in some cases, the only adequate punishment is the death penalty.

-No causal link has been proved between the abolition in 1969 and the murder rate. No experience has shown that hanging had a deterrent effect. I don't wish to see the UK as the only country in Western Europe retaining the death penalty. This extreme penal sanction should not be considered ever as a peace time

Mr Sidney Powell Secretary, Society of Civil and Public Servants

- Hanging would not deter terrorists who would feel they were dying for a cause and might even welcome martyr-dom. While a prospect of hanging might convince some people not to carry arms, those who did so would not be put off using them, in my opinion. In my 36 years' service in the prisons I have been present at several executions. But that doesn't wear I found it a

A few Asians have returned and are running businesses here. But the official process to return their property or to pay them compensation is only now getting under way.
The Uganda Government

now has a substantial number of claims from the Asians, after introducing new legislation last year, and the next step appears to be to sort them out and assess them. Many Ugandans do not want to see a mass return of Asians to their country, and are unhappy about the prespect. But it looks like being many months before decisions can be expected on the Asian's applications and nobody knows whether they will eventually accept the terms on which their property may be offered back to them, In the meantime, Ugandans continue to occupy former Asian shops, offices and houses.

bullfinches are on the tall red docks. The ground is sticky under the lime-trees: the minute aphids that feed on the leaves coat them with a honey-dew that slowly drips off. Ladybirds come to the limes to feed on the aphids; bees come for the rich nectar in the lime-flowers. Under horse-chestnut trees, the grass is covered with embryo fruit that has been knocked off by the thunderstorms. Three spectacular wild been knocked off by the thunder-storms. Three spectacular wild flowers are just coming out neatle-leaved beliflower with its white buds and spiky violet trumpets, and the two finest willowherbs - rosebay willowherb in pale pink spires, and great hairy willowherb, or "codlins and cream", in purple-pink clumps that are often six feet tall. The papers

The Government's recently announced package of spending cuts came under attack in both The Sunday Times and The Observer yesterday. Both newspapers accuse the Government and Mis Thatcher in particular, of "political tinkering" with last February's public expenditure which indicated a higher level of spending than was actually being planned. The Sunday Times said the Printe Minister had always espoused the virtues of honesty and poused the virtues of honesty and consistency, and the fact that she should now be "caught red-handed, fine-tuning the economy to the Tories' political advantage, sticks in the throat. According to The Observer the spending cuts left the Government with "egg on its face".

Capital punishment for terrorists would mean hanging members of the IRA and a few Ulster Protestant extremists but hardly anyone else. says the Daily Mirror. This would lead to greater violence and the deaths of more innocent people, and

MPs who vote for hanging will be unable to avoid responsibility for
